Revolt-Torn Spain Faces New Military Dictatorship

Heavy Fighting Crushes Leading Forces of Rebellion.

Monarchists Take Government Side

Casualties in Thousands With Toll Mounting Rapidly.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Madrid, Oct. 8.—A military dictatorship for revolt-torn Spain was forecast in responsible congressional circles tonight as nobles of the erstwhile monarchy joined 12,000 retired army officers in offering to aid the right-wing government of Premier Alejandro Lerroux.

A high ranking deputy whose name could not be revealed stated that "this uncertainty, if it is continued, will end in military dictatorship."

"The government should take the most drastic steps to end the revolt, since otherwise the dictatorship seems inevitable," he said.

Nobles Offer Aid.

(A military dictatorship, that of Gen. Primo de Rivera, ruled Spain from 1923 to 1929 in conjunction with the monarchy.)

As reports reaching the capital indicated the revolt's heavy fighting with its estimated thousands of casualties had hammered rebels into mere sporadic activity today except in northern Asturias. The Viscount of Cubas, for the nobles, offered the association's service to the republic. This they did, he said, "because in these moments we should think only of Spain, not of political beliefs."

Gen. Jose Sanjurjo, who headed the short-lived monarchist revolt of 1932, telephoned from Lisbon to offer his services.

Veterans Join Fight.

The lining up of nobles and retired army officers, many of them ousted when the republic's first leftist cabinet reorganized the army, served to draw still sharper the line dividing Lerroux from his Socialist-Communist-Anarchist enemies.

Only in the Asturias mining district of Mieres did organized opposition continue, dispatches filtering through wrecked communications systems indicated, while rebels elsewhere had been driven underground, or, in desperation, to sniping and disorders.

The toll of the artillery bombardment of Gijon and Oviedo, two northern cities recaptured today from the rebels, was not known in Madrid, but estimates that took into account the four days of bitter fighting, the use of artillery in Catalonia and elsewhere and aerial bombs, placed the dead and wounded in the thousands.

Conflicting Reports.

The reports that resistance was dying out in Asturias were brought to the capital by reconnoitering and bombing planes, and conflicted sharply with other advices that Asturian rebels had blown up an army truck hurrying shock troops into the province, killing 52.

Several towns smaller than Gijon

Miss Perkins Gets A New Fall Hat—It's Not a Tricorn

San Francisco, Oct. 8 (AP).—Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, has a new hat. It's not of the tricorn type she has worn consistently since she became a Roosevelt Cabinet official, but she said she is going to wear it.

Miss Perkins wore her usual hat style when she addressed the American Federation of Labor convention here last week. Just before she left Saturday for Washington the new hat was presented to her by Nathaniel Spector and Max Goldman, A. F. of L. delegates, who are vice presidents of the cap and millinery department of the United Hatters Union.

The new hat is of black felt, with a brim that turns up on one side and down on the other, and decorated with two bows and a silver buckle. Today Spector received a note of thanks from the Secretary.

Best Dressers Chosen To Guard King's Son

Sydney, New South Wales, Oct. 8 (AP).—Thirty-six detectives especially picked for their alertness and ability to wear morning and evening dress have been assigned to guard the Duke of Gloucester, third son of King George, during his Australian visit.

Since his landing a week ago the duke's friendliness and lack of formality have delighted the public. He appears to be making definite progress in strengthening the royal family's popularity in Australia.

Wisconsin Governor Gains.

Madison, Wis., Oct. 8 (AP).—Gov. Albert G. Schmedeman, whose left leg was amputated at Saint Mary's Hospital Friday night, was reported recovering today.

Daffy Dean Downs Detroit Again, 4 to 3; World Series Now 3-3

Dizzy Dean Probable Choice of St. Louis Today; Cochrane's Selection Is Expected to Be Eldon Auker.

By Shirley L. Povich (Sports Editor of The Post).

Detroit, Oct. 8 (Spl.).—The pitching arm of Paul (Daffy) Dean today reprieved the Cardinals from impending defeat in the world series and lifted the St. Louis team to an even basis at the end of six games.

By the score of 4 to 3, figures that do not reflect amply the suberb performance of the junior Dean, the young giant from Holdenville, Okla., triumphed over "Schoolboy" Rowe and the Detroit Tigers.

With the echo of the last out, the Cardinals became favorites for tomorrow in the decisive game of the series. The odds that favor the St. Louis team are a tribute to its pitching strength, for Manager Frankie Frisch has at his command either Dizzy Dean or Wild Bill Hallahan, either of whom is rated superior to any pitcher Manager Mickey Cochrane can select.

Tonight Cochrane was looking in two directions for his seventh-game pitching nominee, with his choice as yet indefinite. He has available the under-handed Eldon Auker, who repulsed the Cardinals in that 10-4 fourth game, and Al Crowder, the former Washington veteran who has not appeared in the series since the Tiger infield crumbled behind him in the opening game. It was indicated here tonight that Auker would be the choice.

That the irrepressible elder Dean would be the definite choice of Frisch, however, despite his failure in yesterday's fifth game and despite only one day's rest, appeared tonight to be certain. Dizzy is reported to have insisted that he be given the assignment, and he usually has his way with the Cardinals. Rumors that Cochrane would recall Tommy Bridges from his one-day rest for pitching duty tomorrow were as free as the night air, but orthodoxy pointed to either Auker or Crowder.

That ball game today was a cruel blow to the 44,500 Detroit fans who packed the stands at Navin Field. Twice the Tigers raised their hopes as they forged from behind to tie Cardinal leads, but there was no beating Daffy Dean today.

The younger half of the St. Louis pitching firm applied the crowning touch to his own triumph in the

Cuban Strike Nears Close; Losses Heavy

1 Dead, 15 Hurt, Flames Destroy Building in Reign of Terror.

Havana, Oct. 8 (AP).—A left wing general strike that began in violence will end at midnight "as originally planned unless some serious trouble develops," the secretary of the general strike committee announced late today.

Bulletins issued by the committee termed the strike successful and said it demonstrated the power of the organizations which called it. New forces were joining constantly, it was asserted.

The bulletins urged all radical factions to maintain their "united front," until new instructions were issued this evening.

Workers were called on to march upon their closed places of employ and open them by force.

Terrorist Threats.

Terrorist elements which kept the city's nerves jumping last night threatened to resume their campaign more intensively tonight.

Red Cross detachments took over first-aid stations after the staffs joined the strike.

One was dead, 15 wounded, the office of the newspaper Ahora razed by fire and that of Diario de la Marina riddled by gunfire as night fell.

Roving terrorists, riding in automobiles, attacked dozens of street cars during the day. Rifles and ma-

Court Rejects Schwab Plea; Sentences Friend

Pittsburgh, Oct. 8 (AP).—Coming to the aid of a boyhood friend, Charles M. Schwab, of steel fame, pleaded in Federal Court today that mercy be shown Ellis S. Shelly, accused embezzler, and then sadly heard him sentenced to two years in prison.

Ellis had pleaded guilty of taking $85,000 from the First National Bank, of Williamsburg, Pa., while serving as its president—a job Schwab said he gave him.

St. Louis Opera Season Opens.

Juror Bribing Fails; Police Hunt Gambler

Mistrial Declared After Charge; Beard Loses Hearing Demand.

Arrest of a well-known gambler on a charge of criminal contempt of court involving the attempted bribery of a juror, will be sought today in the District Supreme Court as the result of disclosures made by a juror in a gambling case yesterday.

The juror, Charles William Powers, of 5402 Connecticut avenue northwest, a route agent for a Washington newspaper, had been sworn in and was about to take his seat when he suddenly informed Assistant United States Attorney Roger Robb he couldn't sit in the case.

Robb informed Justice James M. Proctor of the situation. Questioning by Justice Proctor brought out that a gambler had approached Powers Saturday and had told him it "would be well worth his while" if he returned a verdict of not guilty in the trial of three men for alleged violations of the gaming laws.

Warrant Attacked.

Meanwhile 13 men arrested in a raid in the Mather Building, on G street, Friday, were seeking unsuccessfully to compel the Government to show its hand against them in a preliminary hearing before United States Commissioner N. C. Turnage.

Samuel R. Beard, described by police as the head of a syndicate that was furnishing race track information to Washintonians, and alleged operator of the "amusement" bureau in which were found 40 trunk telephone lines with 40 connections for each, through his attorney, John J. Sirica, demanded

Gang Burns Roadhouse, Factor Kidnap Scene

Chicago, Oct. 8 (AP).—The Dells, a suburban roadhouse from which John Factor, internationally known speculator, was kidnaped by members of the Touhy gang, was destroyed today by fire set by gangsters.

Four men, armed with machine guns, kidnaped Paul Ott, a watchman, sprinkled the place with gasoline, and set fire to it. They released Ott a mile away. The place, valued at $75,000, had been closed because of inability to obtain a liquor license.

Supreme Court Denies Harris Last Plea From Death Penalty

The execution which Charles Harris, convicted murderer, has staved off time after time became more certain yesterday when the United States Supreme Court denied him the review for which his attorneys had petitioned.

A midwestern Governor and a famous author are among the notables who have visited Harris and brought him encouragement in his death cell at District Jail. But the action of the highest court yesterday virtually seals his doom. Unless President Roosevelt intervenes, he will be electrocuted January 11.

He has received half a dozen stays of execution since he was convicted of killing Milton W. (Milsie) Henry in the early morning of April 21, 1932. For more than a year he was the only white prisoner in "death row."

Sinclair Lewis visited him last June in response to a letter from the convict, who is in his late thirties. In August, 1933, Gov. Floyd B. Olson of Minnesota, who, as a county prosecutor, had Harris sent to prison for bank robbery, had a long talk with him and promised whatever aid he might be able to offer.

Now only the President can save the man who has steadfastly denied that he was one of the two men who, witnesses said, emptied five loads from a shotgun into the body of Henry, a Washington gambler. The murder occurred in Brown street near Oak, a few yards from one of the most fashionable sections of Sixteenth street.

Harris' latest appeal for a review was based on his contention that he had not received a fair trial because of the many aliases placed after his name in the indictment and because of alleged prejudice manifested by the prosecutor. Nine aliases were used, said the appellant, depriving him of the presumption of innocence and injuring his case in the minds of the jury.

High Court To Pass On NRA Rules

Gold Payments for Bond Interest Is a Chief Issue.

McCracken Case Will Not Be Reviewed by Supreme Tribunal.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

On the first day of this year's term devoted to announcing decisions, the Supreme Court yesterday ordered brought to it the records in lower tribunals of three cases involving New Deal legislation in order that they might be heard on their merits.

One of the cases grew out of the resolution passed by Congress abrogating the so-called gold clauses in private and public contracts. Although the sum directly involved in this case is only $15.60, on its determination will depend whether railroads, mortgage companies and other institutions with gold bonds outstanding and even the Treasury will have to pay out billions of dollars as a result of the gold devaluation act.

The other two New Deal cases attack the validity of the oil section of the National recovery act. In addition to challenging the constitutionality of that part of the law, boh cases contend that Presidenial orders limiting production of oil in the east Texas fields are confiscatory and hence invalid.

The Supreme Court, however, refused to review two cases brought by Frederick B. Campbell, New York attorney, challenging the constitutionality of the act and executive orders requiring all holders of gold to turn the yellow metal over to Federal Reserve banks.

One case was an effort to get an injunction to stop a criminal prosecution under the gold-hoarding orders and the other was a civil proceeding to restrain the Chase National Bank from turning Mr. Campbell's gold over to the Reserve System authorities. In neither case did the decisions in the lower courts deal squarely with the validity of the gold-hoarding legislation. Questions of procedure were prominent in their decisions.

Consequently the action of the Supreme Court in refusing to review decisions in lower courts in these two cases can not be regarded as upholding the gold seizure orders. Mr. Campbell, however, must stand trial on a charge of failing to report his gold holdings to the Government as a result of yesterday's action.

248 Reviews Refused.

Altogether the Supreme Court yesterday issued 315 orders. In 248 cases the tribunal refused to grant petitions for review, thus clearing the court's document of that many cases. Petitions for reviews of 67 other cases, including the New Deal controversies, were granted. These cases will be heard on their merits during the next two months.

As soon as the court announced its orders it went immediately to work opening the hearing of cases pending since last spring. The court will meet daily from noon until 4:30 p. m. for the next two weeks to hear arguments in cases. It will then take a recess to prepare opinions in those cases.

One of the first cases to come before the court for argument was 3d West Virginia Holdup Is Laid to Legenza and Mais.

Charleston, W. Va., Oct. 8 (AP).—State police said today two bandits riding in a taxi who kidnaped and robbed Ward Ferrell, a filling station attendant, closely fit descriptions of Robert Mais and Walter Legenza, condemned gangster-slayers, who escaped from the Richmond, Va., Jail.

The taxi they used was a tan 1934 Dodge Sedan, believed to be the one taken from B. P. Duncan, taxi driver, in Bluefield, W. Va., last Wednesday, when he, too was robbed and then tied to a tree on Flat Top Mountain. The day after Duncan was robbed two men, believed to be the same ones, robbed I. C. Shuck, tollgate keeper at Prince, W. Va., releasing him on top of a mountain.

The Bluefield description said the taxi was gray rather than tan, but State Trooper M. B. Hyer said there was every indication it was the same car.

Today Ferrell was robbed of $60 and two pistols and left tied to a tree at the head of Island Creek. He said the men told him it was no use to take their license number because they had several sets in the car and changed them regularly.

A.F.L. Votes 5-Day Week To Aid Idle

Convention to Support Strong Drive for 30 Hours Only.

Green Acclaimed as He Says "Nothing Shall Stop Us."

San Francisco, Oct. 8 (AP).—The American Federation of Labor today pledged all its power to establish the five-day, 30-hour week in the hope of ending unemployment.

Amid tumultous cheers and without a dissenting vote, the federation convention approved a resolution binding the big labor organization to spare no effort in obtaining legislation for the shorter work period with no reductions in wages.

"Nothing shall stop us short of realization of our purpose," said William Green, federation president, as the action was taken.

The problem of shortening the working week was described by E. J. Gainor, of Washington, chairman of the committee presenting the resolution, as "one which must be answered and answered promptly."

Father Coughlin Scored.

Just before the convention acted, the delegates heard Frank X. Martel, Detroit labor leader, denounce the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin for allegedly speculating in silver and for being "an enemy of the trade union movement."

Also addressing the convention, Francis J. Gorman, a leader of the recent textile strike, said organized labor was going to "take the textile industry off a peonage basis."

The 30-hour week commitment put the matter into the hands of the federation's executive committee and gave that body discretionary authority in carrying out the desires of the organization.

Speaking in support of the shorter work move, Green termed it "the only constructive remedy to relieve unemployment." He previously had reported there were 10,000,000 jobless persons in America.

"We will not beseech the Government alone," Green said. "We must meet with both private industry and the Government.

"We issue a challenge to Government and industry together, and nothing shall stop us short of realization of our purpose."

Green Receives Ovation.

Green was given a tremendous ovation by the delegates as he finished speaking and called for the vote on the resolution.

Gainor quoted President Roosevelt as having said, "I will rise or fall insisting that there be no permanent army of unemployed in this country."

The committee chairman said his study had shown "a compelling need of reduction of hours" and "the restoration of purchasing power to restore prosperity."

Gainor's committee, reviewing five years of economic depression, said:

"It is plain that the difficulty lies in the vast expansion of productive efficiency without any comparable expansion in consumer purchasing power."

Martel, in his address attacking Father Coughlin, also said "union labor never had been able to get regular wages in Detroit," and alleged many employers hired "alien commuters."

Attacks Priest on Silver.

At the time silver was rising in price, Martel declared, Father Coughlin allegedly owned 500,000 ounces of the metal, although the speaker said the priest declared it was in his secretary's name.

"I have no intention of saying anything more about Father Coughlin's speculation in silver, provided he does not make any more attacks on organized labor," Martel said. "Father Coughlin has definitely established himself as an enemy of the trade union movement."

"Union labor never has been able

Doors Stay Closed On Vanderbilt Case

Physician Testifies as to Child's Hysterics.

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—Supreme Court Justice John F. Carew decided today that the remainder of the court fight for custody of Gloria Vanderbilt, 10-year-old heiress, will be a private affair.

The court's decision was announced by Justice Carew's clerk and also by a court attendant just before the hearings were resumed today.

Dr. Stuart L. Craig, who treated the child for hysteria September 21, the date on which her mother, Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt, charges the girl was "spirited away" by her aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, was the first witness called today by counsel for Mrs. Whitney.

Chicago Gunmen Get $50,000 Jewelry Loot

Chicago, Oct. 8 (AP).—Two leisurely gunmen rifled a jewelry firm's safe of an estimated $50,000 in valuables today after they had locked up four occupants of the building.

Hauptmann Indicted As Baby's Murderer; Lindbergh Testifies

Key Witness in Murder Indictment

Col. Norman H. Schwarzkopf (left), head of the New Jersey State police, and Col. Charles A. Lindbergh appeared yesterday before the Hunterdon County grand jury at Flemington, N. J., just a short while before an indictment was returned charging Bruno Richard Hauptmann with murder of the Lindbergh baby.

New U. S. Quiz Started as Clews Are Found in Notebook.

Flemington, N. J., Oct. 8 (AP).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann was indicted for the kidnap-murder of Baby Charles A. Lindbergh by a Hunterdon County grand jury today.

Swiftly, with Col. Lindbergh among the witnesses, the State of New Jersey laid down its evidence charging up to the stolid, tight-lipped German alien the most sensational crime in modern annals.

The indictment was voted but a few minutes after the last witness was heard. In all, the grand jury session lasted only 4 hours and 42 minutes.

Text of Indictment.

The text of the indictment read:

"The grand inquest for the State of New Jersey in and for the body of the County of Hunterdon, upon their respective oaths present, that Bruno Richard Hauptmann, on the first day of March, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two, with force and arms, at the Township of East Amwell, in the County of Hunterdon aforesaid and within the jurisdiction of this court, did wilfully, feloniously and of his malice aforethought, kill and murder Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., contrary to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided, and against the peace of this State, the government and dignity of the same.

"(Signed) Anthony M. Hauck, jr., prosecutor of the pleas."

Alibi Prepared.

Hardly had the three women and 20 men on the grand jury convened their deliberation than, across the Hudson, Hauptmann's attorney, James M. Fawcett, was denied permission in Bronx County Court to examine the records of the indictment returned in New York charging Hauptmann with extortion of $50,000 ransom.

Fawcett disclosed his defense in both New York and New Jersey would be alibi in nature.

"I am prepared to show in any court," the attorney said, "that my client was elsewhere on the night Baby Lindbergh was snatched from his nursery crib at the Hopewell home."

The Jersey session was in charge of Attorney General David T. Wilentz, of New Jersey; his assistant, Joseph Lanigan, and County Prosecutor Hauck.

In convening the grand jury, Supreme Court Justice Thomas N. Trenchard directly stated the charge against Hauptmann.

In part, he said:

Farm Census To 'Dole Out' 25,000 Jobs

Battle Over Patronage by Democrats Gains Strength.

By Robert C. Albright.

New life was injected yesterday into Democratic patronage clamorings, as a 25,000-job pool for the January agricultural census was announced by Director of the Census William L. Austin.

Plans for the 1935 farm check, authorized in a $2,270,000 Congressional appropriation, were disclosed at the height of a preelection scramble for more jobs to soothe unemployed and disgruntled constituents.

The census is slated January 1, but it was learned yesterday that a base force of 80 men already has been recruited here, and field enlistments will get under way in earnest in November and December.

Announced as "the most important enumeration since the inception of farm statistics in 1840," the check of farm population, acreage, values and yields comprises only part of a program originally designed to embrace industry and unemployed, giving temporary jobs to 100,000 workers.

Plan Attacked by G. O. P.

Attacked by Republicans as "a Democratic effort to buy the election with jobs," the broader program would have moved up the census date from January 1 to November 12. It was defeated last

Work Started On '36 Budget By Roosevelt

Morgenthau, Bell Called; Balancing Prospect Seems Slight.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

President Roosevelt yesterday took a hand in the preparation of the 1936 Federal budget, summoning Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Daniel W. Bell, acting budget director, to the White House for a preliminary conference on expenditures after next June 30.

Out of this and similar meetings, to be held up to the opening of Congress in January, will come the answer to the question of how far the Administration intends to go in balancing outgo with income, in tapering off the present heavy outlays for recovery and relief.

As the President already has indicated his desire to retain most of the New Deal machinery, including the Civilian Conservation Corps, prospects for actually balancing the next budget appeared remote, if not altogether out of sight.

Alternating Courses.

To accomplish this the Administration would be faced with the problem of cutting off, or drastically curtailing expenditures in this direction, or seeking greatly increased revenue from more taxation. So far, no inclination for either course has been discernible in Administration quarters.

All parties to yesterday's conference maintained close silence, but it was generally expected that next year's budget—lige this year's—will be balanced approximately as to "normal" expenditures, covering routine operations of the oGvernment, and actual income.

If this course is followed again, the amount of the deficit for the fiscal year 1936 would be the total appropriated for the so-called

Marine Strike In N. Y. Opened

Crews of Six Ships Reported Brought Out by Pickets.

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—Pickets covered the water front today as the strike called by the Marine Workers' Industrial Union, a nonaffiliate of the American Federation of Labor, began.

Roy Hudson, chairman of the strike committee, said that pickets were successful in bringing out the crews of six ships, the Steel Mariner, of the Isthmian Line; the Ardmore, of the Mallory Line; the Dupont line's La Mott Dupont, the Olympic, a Dollar Line tanker; the Texas Ranger, oil tanker of the New Tex Line, and the Ward Liner Havana.

Pickets were stationed in front of steamship piers. Groups of 20 to 25 men, called organization committees, moved along the water front seeking to bring out the seamen.

Heavy police details were prepared to thwart possible disorders.

The strike was called by the joint committee representing the Marine Workers' Union, the American Radio Telegraphists Association and unorganized seamen.

Harlan, Ky., Oct. 8 (AP).—Two Negroes whose general description tallied with those who attacked Mrs. Maggie Dunn, 30, a widow, in Bell County Saturday, were arrested here today. They gave their names as Alec White, 40, and Willie Lee Wynne, 30, but denied the crime.

The Negroes told police they were unemployed and had slept Friday night near Four-Mile Hollow in Bell County, where Mrs. Dunn was attacked and beaten.

Insull Papers Can't Be Found, Witness Says

Halsey Stuart Auditor Is Excused to Make New Search.

Chicago, Oct. 8 (AP).—Harry Howard, auditor of Halsey Stuart & Co., investment banking house, aroused the ire of Government prosecutors today when he failed to produce six documents subpenaed in the Insull mail fraud case.

Questioned by Special Assistant Attorney General Forest Harness, one of the three prosecutors handling the Government's charges against Samuel Insull, sr., and 16 business associates, Howard promised to make a new search for the papers, but insisted he did not know where they were.

Included in the six, as they were identified in court by Harness, was a memo bearing the initials "C. T. M.," those of Clarence T. MacNeille, one of the defendants, and sent to Halsey Stuart & Co., on March 3, 1930.

It said in part:

"Junior called me this afternoon and stated that in view of the fact that so many people seem to be talking about selling Corporation Securities Co. of Chicago stock—he did not know just why—that he suggested that I make up some figures as to what our earnings would be for 1930."

Dividends to Junior.

Another of the missing letters was one from MacNeille, who was secretary-treasurer of Insull's Corporation Securities Co., to Harry L. Stuart, of the investment banking house. Harness described it as one which "said in part:"

"I read your telegram regarding the payment of dividends on common stock to Junior."

"Junior" refers to Insull's son, Samuel Insull, jr., who is one of the defendants.

Prosecutors then speeded preparations for the introduction of the first testimony about Insull's Corporation Securities Co. and the $100,000,000 financial collapse which they charge was a "simple swindle."

Bookkeepers, secretaries and auditors paraded to the witness stand to vouch for new stocks of business records, with the prospect this kind of preliminary work would be finished early tomorrow.

While a dozen hand truck loads of books were brought in, identified and piled into the Government's 21-foot bookcase, the keenest interest focused on the six missing letters.

Excused for New Search.

"They're not in our files," Howard declared. "They may be in the files of the Corporation Securities Co." He was excused temporarily to make a new search.

Carbon copies of the papers, which United States District Attorney Dwight H. Green said were not essential to the Government's case, were in the prosecutors' hands.

Clarence E. Packman, trustee in bankruptcy for Middle West Utilities Co., $2,000,000,000 holding concern which was the key unit in the Insull system, came in with a hand truck bearing 59 ledgers.

Oliver E. McCormick produced records of "Syndicate A," a stock market group the Government claims was formed to deal in Insull stocks.

Twenty-one witnesses were heard in the morning session.

Harness said the next witnesses would be expected to supply background facts about the for ation of the company and that victims of the concern's crash would come later.

chine guns reechoed through the streets during the early morning, but afternoon brought respite from violence.

Some Continue Work.

Light, power, gas and water unions, left wing government employes and taxi drivers continued work despite strike orders.

Last night was tense for the capital, as 35 bombs exploded, snipers fired from rooftops or sped about the silent streets in automobiles.

The strike was sponsored by the Communist Confederation of Labor. Authorities said they found evidence indicated its purpose was the government's overthrow. Arrests of scores of radicals and closing of labor centers followed promptly, here and in the interior.

"Is There a Santa Claus?" Gov. Brann Wonders After Visit to Hopkins About Potatoes.

By Raymond Clapper

HAVING won his spectacular reelection in Maine a short time ago on the Santa Claus issue, Gov. Louis J. Brann came to Washington yesterday to collect, but departed wondering whether there was a Santa Claus after all.

"If there is," the dapper little Governor said to himself as he went to the White House, "he'll be known by the name of Harry Hopkins and he'll buy 7,000 carloads of Maine potatoes for relief food."

Sure enough the White House told him Mr. Hopkins was the man to see and he did. Only Mr. Hopkins denied he was Santa Claus.

"If you want me to buy your potatoes," the relief administrator explained, "I'll have to get Secretary Wallace to declare a potato surplus before I can do anything for you."

The hitch is that there isn't any potato surplus, except a local one in Aroostook County, Maine. The country as a whole is short on potatoes. So it is up to Secretary Wallace to decide whether he wants to play Santa Claus especially for Gov. Brann. The Governor left town feeling like a small boy when it begins to dawn on him that maybe there isn't any Santa Claus.

Of course there is no politics in such a scientific operation as taking a census. Just the same, however, when the forthcoming farm census announcement was written, certain persons insisted that the emphasis be laid on the large number of enumerating jobs that would be provided. So when the formal announcement appeared it bore this heading in capital letters: "25,000 PERSONS TO GET JOBS TAKING FARM CENSUS."

Furthermore, while this special census will give a complete count of everything grown on American farms, down to the last goat and kid, nobody is counting the number of human beings out of work. The number of unemployed in the country apparently is considered a detail for the United States Chamber of Commerce and the American Federation of Labor to quarrel about.

The current mystery man in Washington is the new chairman of the National Industrial Recovery Board, S. Clay Williams. He feels uncomfortable in the NRA gold fish bowl and tries to hide. But Secretary of Commerce Roper is thoroughly satisfied with him. Williams is his man. They both grew up in North Carolina. Roper had been unhappy during the Johnson regime because his Department of Commerce was elbowed out of the picture every time it made a friendly advance. Now one of his closest buddies is in the saddle, and his advice will not be so rudely spurned.

Williams is a lawyer who became a tobacco executive after winning a case for the Reynolds Tobacco Co. while pinch-hitting for the company's regular counsel. He has a farm near Winston-Salem, where he raises prize cattle, sheep, turkeys, chickens, and many other things, but no tobacco. A big former football star, he takes his athletics vicariously now as one of the financial backers of the Winston-Salem Baseball Club, of the Piedmont League. Occasionally, he can be persuaded that it's too long a time between drinks. Business men like him. He used to be an Al Smith Democrat.

Distinguished visitors pause in amazement as they cross the stately White House threshold and find themselves suddenly in a bedlam of roaring shouts: "Now Dizzy's winding up!" "Here she comes!" "Bang! It's a hit!" It is the radio in the usher's room blaring out the play by play account of the World Series through the lower floor of the White House. The noise, mingling with the clacking of typewriters and the scuffling of feet as stenographers, clerks, newspaper reporters, secret service men, photographers, and miscellaneous job hunters go about their business, makes a newspaper office seem by comparison like an empty church.

Former Gov. Max Gardner, of North Carolina, says there isn't a single Hoovercart left in his State. Toward the end of the Hoover Administration, poverty-ridden North Carolina farmers began abandoning their old automobiles, converting them into two-wheeled carts to which they hitched mules. Communities engaged in rival parades of Hoovercarts on Saturday afternoons, prizes going to the most dilapidated vehicle.

"They're all gone now," Gardner says. "The reason is that farmers are getting 40 cents a pound for tobacco. Two years ago they were getting 8 cents. Tobacco is a $100,000,000 crop in North Carolina this year."

Ancient Legend of Pied Piper Makes Hameln's Trade Thrive

Many Tourists Travel Far to See City That Was Freed of Rats.

Hameln, Germany (AP).—The Pied Piper did a good job when he rid Hameln of rats 650 years ago.

His price was high—legend says the lives of 130 children—but the rats haven't come back; and, more important, the story of his tunes that lured rodents and ragamuffins to their death has meant to this city what harbors, railroads, industries and trade mean to others—money.

So says the jolly, fat burgher who is the most regular guest at the picturesque "Cat's Jug" restaurant.

"Oh, maybe a little mouse or two there is," he said, "but rats—no! no! A mouse now and then to keep our cats happy, but the Rattenfaenger cleaned the rats all out.

"We do a healthy business because of the Piper tradition. Cards, mementos, books, our museum, our little play—and the story brings tourists, many tourists, to see our town and buy our things."

He did not need to emphasize his point, for the visitor here sees the picture of a rat upon entering the railroad station, posters showing the Piper on all roads leading into the city and many mementos in almost all shops.

The town clock—after a cheerful medley that doesn't indicate the time—opens every hour with a stage-like contrivance to reveal a revolving platform on which the Piper appears, followed first by the rats and then by the children, all carved from wood and painted brightly.

This summer marked the 650th anniversary of the tradition. The story is told many times and in many ways to former Hameln residents who accepted the city's invitation to return for the festivities.

Bribe Attempt Charge Starts Gambler Hunt

Juror's Story Leads to Mistrial; Beard Fails to Win Hearing.

the hearing. He alleged the warrant on which the raid was based was defective.

Commissioner Turnage, informed by John W. Fihelly, Assistant United States Attorney, that there had been important developments in the case since the raid, said it would "be foolish" for him to hold a hearing now when the District Grand Jury could investigate the case.

Fihelly informed the Commissioner a list of the names and addresses of the present grand jurors had been found in the place and was at that moment being shown the grand jury in its investigation of charges against Beard and his companions.

Three on Trial.

Rudolph E. Sutton, Walter R. Schmitt and Lewis Newman, arrested in a gaming raid February 7, were the defendants on trial when Powers made his statement. They were charged with operating a place at 1746 Columbia road northwest.

Justice Proctor declared a mistrial and directed the impanelling of a new jury. Eleven of the 12 members of the new jury were included in the first panel. Robb sent a steady stream of prosecution witnesses to the stand to connect the trio with the taking of a wager and at the conclusion of the day had in the record bills and a rental agreement allegedly signed by Sutton.

Two huge doors, removed from the Columbia road premises by police raiders, were trucked into court and shown to the jurors as evidence.

In addition to a citation for criminal contempt of court, Fihelly said he would seek an indictment charging the "jury tamperer" with attempted bribery. Under the law, the mere attempt to sway the decision of a juryman is made a crime with heavy punishment.

Picture Indentified.

Powers was escorted to Fihelly's office where he made a voluminous written statement of the alleged attempt to bribe him. Lieut. George Little, head of the police raiding squad, was called and the description of the gambler was given him. Powers said he did not know the man's real name but his description and a "guess" at the name brought Lieut. Little back in a few minutes wtih the picture of a known gambler.

This man was arrested on gaming charges in 1929. Powers identified the picture as that of the man who approached him.

Attorney Fihelly said that not only would the criminal contempt of court be pressed, but that any other persons found to have been implicated in the attempt to bribe Powers would be haled into court.

After receiving the contempt citation, Justice Proctor is expected to issue an order requiring the gambler to show cause why he should not be found in criminal contempt and sent to jail.

Britain to Celebrate King's Silver Anniversary Next Year

London Will Give Lead to Far-Flung Empire in Official Ceremonies Marking Accession to Throne in 1910.

London (AP).—London will give the lead to King George's far-flung empire in official celebrations next May of the 25th anniversary of his accession to the throne.

All of 1935 will be known as the "silver jubilee year" in honor of his eventful reign, which has been exceeded in duration by only four of the 13 sovereigns who preceded him since the union of the crowns of England and Scotland.

Pomp and splendor rivaling the golden and diamond pubilees of Queen Victoria are forecast already despite the king-emperor's expressed wish that celebrations be kept as simple as possible and undue expenditure avoided.

Holiday May 6.

May 6, the actual anniversary of when the 44-year-old "sailor prince" became king-emperor, will be a national holiday. It will be inaugurated by a thanksgiving service in St. Paul's Cathedral, which will be attended by the king. Queen Mary and members of the royal family.

The king and queen will drive in state to the cathedral, but on ground of economy it has been decided to limit the size of the procession.

The order of the service will be selected by the king and in the congregation are expected to be not only the prime ministers of the dominions and colonial representatives, but rulers or their representatives from all the countries of the world.

There will be one notable absentee. President de Valera of the Irish Free State has said "that in the existing conditions it will not be possible for the Irish Free State government to send a representative."

Banquet at Palace.

It is understood that later there will be a great banquet in Buckingham Palace and a state ball.

Besides the thanksgiving rites, services of similar character are to take place either on May 6, which falls on a Monday, or on the Sunday following, May 12, in churches throughout the empire and jubilee observances are to be organized along local lines in all colonies and dominions.

Unless domestic affairs make their attendance impossible, the prime ministers of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa will come to London and it is regarded certain that the opportunity will be taken for imperial talks, if not an imperial conference.

President Acts On New Budget At Conference

Morgenthau, Bell Called; Balancing Prospect Seems Slight.

"emergency" agencies. What these requirements might be remained the problem for the President, in his budget message, and Congress to decide.

In presenting his first budget to Congress last January, Mr. Roosevelt estimated that expenditures would exceed revenue up to June 30 by $7,309,000,000, and that the deficit for this fiscal year would be $1,986,000,000 more. The total for the two years was put at $9,295,000,000.

Greater Spending Seen.

When the actual deficit on June 30 totaled only $3,629,000,000, the President explained that the difference would be made up in this fiscal year, or others to come. Explanation for the difference lay in the fact that only part of the sums appropriated had been spent.

Spending is expected to increase this winter, largely due to heavy sums authorized but not drawn on for public works and relief, but it remained doubtful if the two-year deficit would reach the unprecedented figure set by the President.

The deficit for the first quarter of this fiscal year, covering operations from June 30 to September 29, stood at only $525,000,000. This brought to $4,154,000,000 the deficit to date since the President penned his budget message, but is still short by $5,141,000,000 the original estimate.

A large part of this still unexpended sum in the Treasury is accounted for by the RFC, which is directly authorized to call for $1,792,000,000 more. However, repayments to this huge lending corporation are now equalling or exceeding new loans, thus lowering the prospective deficit.

In presenting his budget at the first of this year, Mr. Roosevelt wrote Congress, "We should plan to have a definitely balanced budget for the third year of recovery and from that time on seek a continuing reduction of the National debt." This problem, taken with a continuation of relief and recovery demands, is now engrossing the White House.

Insull May Return To Greece if Jury Says He's Innocent

Chicago, Oct. 8 (U.P.).—Samuel Insull may return to Greece—land of his self-imposed exile—if he is acquitted of charges of directing a $143,000,000 fraud.

Mrs. Insull said last night that the climate in the United States is too severe for him.

"Mild weather such as we had in Greece is much better for his bronchitis," she said. "He loved it there."

Asked whether the 74-year-old utilities magnate, on trial in Federal Court with 16 associates on charges of using the United States mails to defraud thousands of investors, had made tentative plans to return to Greece, Mrs. Insull said:

"There have been no plans, we just live from day to day now."

The trial will enter its second week Monday with the Government barely launched on its staggering heap of evidence.

AUTHORITY MEASURES "AUTO-FATIGUE"—EXPLAINS WHY YOU CAN NOW ENJOY LONG DRIVES

CHICAGO, October, 1934—In a series of tests just concluded here, Dr. Andrew H. Ryan, well-known scientist, and his staff have found how to measure effects of "auto-fatigue," that condition of nervous and muscular exhaustion which follows long, hard drives.

"I noted," says Dr. Ryan, "that the driver on the Dodge car showed 54% to 65% less fatigue, as shown by nervous and muscular impairment, than on other cars tested."

It is because the new, bigger Dodge has an unusual combination of advanced engineering features. You are protected against engine vibrations, road shocks, noise, and other causes of exhaustion. Obviously, the car lasts longer, runs with fewer repairs, when destructive vibration is smothered.

Ask your Dodge dealer now for a free copy of the booklet explaining Dr. Ryan's discoveries in detail. Then drive a Dodge. You'll see for yourself that it is easier riding, easier driving than any car you have ever driven.—Adv.

Jurors Indict Hauptmann as Baby's Slayer

Lindbergh Is Witness as New Jersey Clinches Kidnap Case.

they think tends to show one Hauptmann murdered Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., in this county on March 1, 1932. * * *

"They have stated to the court evidence to be presented will tend to show that Hauptmann, the accused, in this county, in the course of a burglary on the dwelling of Col. Lindbergh, done for the purpose of committing a battery upon and stealing the infant son of Charles A. Lindbergh, caused such child to be stricken and injured as a result of which he died, or that in any event, * * * the evidence will show that the child was killed as the result of a blow or stroke closely connected with the burglary and which was inflicted by the accused in this county."

This was the first authentic indication that New Jersey authorities would place direct participation in the killing of Baby Lindbergh on Hauptmann.

Ransom Money Displayed.

Justice Trenchard added that the grand jurors "should find an indictment for murder, regardless of whether the stroke and injury was accidentally or was intentionally inflicted."

Throughout the investigation, it has been thought likely the famous baby was dropped and fatally wounded by the abductor as the kidnap ladder cracked.

The Jersey grand jury evidence in many respects paralleled that used to indict Hauptmann in Bronx County, N. Y., for extorting the $50,000 ransom paid by Col. Lindbergh even though his first-born was dead.

Some of the ransom gold certificates found in the Hauptmann garage were shown to the grand jurors.

The kidnap notes were put into evidence. They were identified by the two New York handwriting experts, Albert F. and Albert B. Osborne, father and son, as of the same handwriting as Hauptmann.

Other Evidence.

The closet panel from the Hauptmann home, with the telephone of "Jafsie," the intermediary—Dr. John F. Condon—written on it, was brought to Flemington.

The jurors also were given the report of Arthur Koehler, wood technologist of the Federal Forestry Service, who avowed the lumber used in making the ladder, up which the kidnaper climbed to Baby Lindbergh's nursery, was purchased at a Bronx yard where Hauptmann worked prior to the kidnaping.

The newest witness in the long months of investigation, Millard Whited, was another who went before the grand jury.

It was Whited, a lumberman from Lambertville, who identified Hauptmann as the man he saw lurking in the Sourland Mountain woods about the Lindbergh Hopewell home a few days before the abduction.

The first of the long line of witnesses taken into the grand jury room of the 100-year-old Hunterdon courthouse was Dr. Charles E. Mitchell, Mercer County physician. In his autopsy, Dr. Mitchell reported the Lindbergh Baby's death was caused by a skull fracture.

Lindbergh Testifies.

This fracture, he said in a statement several weeks ago, could have been inflicted either by a blow or a bullet.

Col. Lindbergh came to Flemington an hour after the jurors convened. His car was escorted from the home of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Dwight Morrow, in Englewood, by a State trooper.

Met by Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, superintendent of State police, he was taken at once to the jury room. He stayed in the room only 25 minutes.

Col. Lindbergh would not discuss the case publicly. His testimony over, the flier went straight to his automobile and drove away.

Although the courthouse was crowded earlier in the day, it was virtually deserted when the indictment was returned.

In denying Attorney Fawcett's request for a copy of the Bronx County grand jury minutes, County Judge Harry Stackell said "it is obvious that the motion is made purely for the dismissal of the indictment, and upon the merits of the motion I deny it."

Says There Is Identification.

There is sufficient evidence in the extortion case, Judge Stackell declared, "to withstand any motion to dismiss the indictment. * * * This case has met with so much public attention it is unlikely that the indictment would be dismissed."

District Attorney Samuel Foley, of Bronx County, contested the motion in the county court, argued that Fawcett wanted the grand jury minutes in an effort to have the indictment dismissed, and declared to Judge Stackell that "the assumption that there has been no identification is merely hearsay."

"While I am not at liberty to disclose the minutes of the grand jury," Foley said, "the identification does exist in the case and it is not circumstantial evidence."

Further identification of Hauptmann was included in the rapid-breaking developments of the day.

Seek Murder Indictment.

After the county court hearing, District Attorney Foley announced that Charles Galambos, of Manville, N. J., identified Hauptmann as the man who stored an automobile in Galambos' garage for five months in 1932.

Manville is about 15 miles from Hopewell.

This identification was deemed important by Bronx County officials in refuting the claim of Hauptmann that he had not been in the Hopewell vicinity.

In the Hunterdon County action, the court instructed the jurors that the prosecutors, at this time, asked for only a murder indictment.

This was interpreted as a move to forestall the possibility of Hauptmann pleading guilty to a lesser offense than murder.

In all, 24 witnesses were heard by the grand jury.

Hauptmann Stays in Jail.

Justice Trenchard had remained at the courthouse to await the indictment.

After the jurors filed in, the name of Hauptmann was not once mentioned. The clerk questioned Foreman Robinson; he replied in the affirmative. The indictment was handed to the bench.

"Mr. Attorney General and Mr. Prosecutor," Trenchard said, "we observe there is an indictment returned here for murder. That indictment will be handed to the clerk and will be retained in oyer and terminer for trial."

The gray-haired, mustached justice thanked the jurors, then left the bench.

Hauptmann, during all the proceedings remained in his jail cell in the Bronx.

Maryland Prisoner New Kidnap Suspect

The names of persons who appeared in the Lindbergh kidnaping case were found in a notebook of a prisoner at the Maryland House of Correction yesterday and precipitated an investigation by the Department of Justice to determine whether the convict has any knowledge of the case.

In a notebook of Walter Codona, 54, who claims to be one of the original "Flying Codonas" of circus fame, prison officials found the names and addresses of Bruno Hauptmann, accused slayer of the Lindbergh baby; Henry L. Breckenridge, Col. Lindbergh's attorney, and Dr. John F. "Jafsie" Condon.

In a small handbag which Codona brought to the Maryland House of Correction at Jessups, penal officials found six safety pins, a toy elephant, a baby's pacifier and signet ring bearing the seal of New Jersey.

Arrested in Baltimore.

Codona was arrested in Baltimore on September 21 on a charge of passing bad checks and defrauding a hotel. He was sentenced to 15 months' imprisonment. While his personal effects were being searched upon commitment, the discovery of the apparent clews to the kidnaping case was made.

The prisoner claims he was born in Germany and that his correct name is Walter Kraus. Dr. J. L. Wright, superintendent of the house, notified Superintendent of Maryland Prisoners Harold I. Donnell, who enlisted the aid of the Department of Justice.

Operatives from the Federal agency conferred yesterday with the prison officials and took samples of Codona's handwriting and his fingerprints. The first date in the notebook, the Justice men observed, was March 1, the day of the kidnaping.

The memorandum also bore the address of the National Lumber & Millwork Co., of New York City, from which detectives believe Hauptmann secured the lumber for the construction of the ladder used in reaching the nursery window of the Sourlands Mountain home of the Lindberghs.

Another notation was "Isadore 'Izzy' Fish," presumably meant to be Fisch, from whom Hauptmann claims to have obtained the ransom money.

Justice agents were expected to return today to Jessups to question the suspect. According to jail officials, the prisoner is unaware that he is suspected in the Lindbergh kidnaping.

Lindbergh Identifies Voice of Hauptmann

Trenton, N. J., Oct. 8 (U.P.).—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh has identified the voice of Bruno Richard Hauptmann as that of the man he heard in a Bronx cemetery the night $50,000 in ransom money was delivered by Dr. John F. Condon, Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, chief of the New Jersey State police, announced tonight.

Lindbergh presumably recognized Hauptmann's voice when he secretly examined the German carpenter in the office of District Attorney Samuel J. Foley of the Bronx.

Col. Schwarzkopf told of the recognition following a conference with Gov. A. Harry Moore, Attorney General David T. Wilentz and Assistant Attorney General Joseph A. Lanigan.

Col. Schwarzkopf was asked specifically if Col. Lindbergh, in appearing before the Hunterdon County grand jury at Flemington today had identified Hauptmann's voice.

"He had previously identified Hauptmann's voice as that of the man he heard at the cemetery," the police chief said.

Students Walk Out At Chicago School

1,700 Protest Colored Attendance at Classes.

Chicago, Oct. 8 (AP).—More than 1,700 pupils of Morgan Park High School struck today, seemingly with parental support, in protest against Negro attendance at classes.

Only 58 students, two-thirds of them Negroes, were on hand. Three policemen strolled through the school corridors and three more paced the sidewalks. Several reserve squads were in readiness at the Morgan Park Station. More than 100 parents of students went to Superintendent of Schools William J. Bogan last week and told him that unless the Negro and white pupils were segregated, they would keep their children at home.

Principal William Schoch said classes would be conducted as long as students were present.

Air Lines Back Control by U. S.

United Head Sees Firms Willing to Grant Wide Powers.

(Associated Press.)

A small air line, National Parks Airways, and one of the country's largest, United Air Lines, Inc., yesterday urged the President's Aviation Commission to recommend establishment of a permanent agency to supervise all civil aviation.

Albert Frank and W. A. Patterson, president of National Parks and United, respectively, differed with other air-line executives on one major question. They favored air mail payments which would cover both transportation costs and subsidies. Officials of other lines last week urged a uniform payment scale with additional subsidies voted by Congress on recommendation of the proposed commission.

Patterson said transport companies were in a state of "hysteria" and therefore wished to give the proposed new agency "power over everything under the sun." He favored fixation of minimum wages for pilots and mechanics, but not for officials.

Patterson and Frank both said the lines were entitled to subsidies because the Postoffice Department required them to carry mail on any plane it considered advisable. Passengers frequently were forced off to make room for mail on his line, Patterson testified.

He said that unless Congress passed legislation "founded on fairness to the Government, the public and the industry" within 60 days after it convened, the larger companies would require extensive refinancing to carry on beyond June 15. He attacked vigorously the provision of the Black-McKellar air mail law, effective in March, barring transcontinental operators from Coast routes.

Hearing on Bus Fares Is Set Here by NRA

A public hearing to determine the reasonableness of existing schedules of minimum bus fares between New York and Washington, New York and Chicago, and intermediate points will be held October 19 in the Washington Hotel by the NRA.

The schedules drawn up by the Code Authority for the motor bus industry had been approved by the Administration. An appeal was taken to the Industrial Appeals Board by the Nevin Transit Co. and the Seven States Transit Co. The companies claim the authority did not have full information when the rates were fixed.

Eight Planes In Pilgrimage To Kitty Hawk

Air Congress Delegates Pay Tribute to Wrights.

Something new in the way of pilgrimages was inaugurated yesterday when a caravan of eight planes journeyed from Washington to Kitty Hawk, N. C., to pay tribute there to the fathers of aviation.

The pilgrims were princes, barons, counts and commoners, gathered here from all parts of the world for the thirty-fourth congress of the Federation Aeronautique Internationale.

In the first plane, a huge Boeing transport, rode Mrs. Louis Bleriot, wife of the Frenchman who in 1909 flew the English Channel.

As the plane circled over the sand dunes of Kitty Hawk, Mrs. Bleriot dropped a wreath from the cabin window. Down it fluttered, a French tri-color serving as a tail, to land at the base of the Wright Memorial, a 60-foot shaft on Kill Devil Hill.

Tribute to Wilbur Wright.

The wreath was Louis Bleriot's tribute to Wilbur Wright who, with his brother, Orville, gave wings to man on that desolate stretch 31 years ago.

Bleriot himself was "grounded" at the Mayflower Hotel, 50 crackups in his long flying career having had their effect on his heart.

None of the eight planes in yesterday's parade landed at Kitty Hawk. The sand there, while suitable for the frail, kite-like thing that the Wrights flew, would hardly support the giant offspring that roared over it yesterday.

After circling the memorial and dipping their wings, the planes headed for Langley Field, Va., the Army's big aviation post.

Hear Friendship Plea.

There, in the Officers Club, the delegates and their women folk were the luncheon guests of Col. Charles Danforth, the commanding officer. In a speech afterward, Col. Danforth told his guests that Army officers looked upon aviation not merely as a weapon of war, but as a medium to bring the peoples of the world closer together in bonds of friendship.

Prince Georges Bibesco, of Rumania, international president of the F. A. I., who responded for the visitors, echoed this sentiment.

Following luncheon the delegates were taken on a tour of the laboratories of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. They saw how the Government's experts, working in a vast air tunnel, measure the resistance of a plane against the wind; how they judge the merits of seaplane pontoons in a $2,000-foot water tank, and how many other wonders of modern aviation are developed.

At Two Entertainments.

Returning to Washington as the sun went down, the delegates dressed hurriedly and went into two more social sessions—a dinner at the German Embassy in honor of Herr Wolfgang von Gronau, premier flier of the Reich, and a buffet supper afterward at the Polish Embassy.

The opening session of the F. A. I. congress will start at 11 a. m. today in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building. Addresses will be made by Hiram Bingham, president of the National Aeronautic Association, and Prince Bibesco.

F. A. I. gold medals are scheduled to be awarded Wiley Post and Count de la Vaulx. Last night, however, there was some doubt as to whether Post would get here. When last heard from he was hunting in Alaska.

At 1 p. m. the delegates will be luncheon guests of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce in the Carlton, and at 5 p. m. they will be President Roosevelt's guests at a White House tea.

Tonight they will attend a reception at the Rumanian Legation to meet Prince and Princess Bibesco.

Inquiry Under Way In Killing at Church

Marshall, Ark., Oct. 8 (AP).—An investigation was launched today into the firing of a dozen shots in a crowded church at Witt Springs last night, one of which killed Mrs. Mary Johnson, 66.

Prosecuting Attorney Jack Holt and officers left for the community, 25 miles southwest of here, after it was reported that the shooting had been done by a group of men who had been rebuked by the Rev. M. R. Clark for drunkenness and attempting to disturb the revival.

Virginia Waits Move by Byrd

Senator May Take Stump in Coming Campaign.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 8 (Spl.).—Organization of local Democratic committees for the Congressional campaign in Virginia has been completed, and sample ballots are being sent out to precinct workers in all the nine districts, J. Murray Hooker, chairman of the Democratic State central committee, said today. Campaign headquarters are in the Richmond Hotel.

Chairman Hooker is organizing to get out a large Democratic vote, although none of the candidates appear to have strong opposition.

No word has been received yet as to whether Senator Harry F. Byrd will take the stump during the campaign. He is opposed by Lawrence C. Page, Norfolk, Republican, who has announced that he will do some speaking and presumably Senator Byrd is waiting for a move by his principal opponent before unmasking his batteries.

Senator Byrd long has been famous as one of the most peppery campaigners in Virginia political life and his friends are anxious for him to make at least one speech in Richmond during the campaign.

to get regular wages in Detroit," Martel continued. "The pay there is from 25 to 40 per cent lower than the union scale.

Gorman, first vice president of the United Textile Workers of America and chairman of the recent strike, said in his statement regarding the textile industry:

"Ending our strike, in which 500,000 men and women stopped work, workers went back into the mills on the heels of the most amazing victory ever won by an American labor union," Gorman said.

"During the course of the strike our people faced the guns of 40,000 militiamen and they did not flinch. Had there been no militia and no armed guards I feel confident there would have been no lives lost and no violence. * * *

"Under the report of the Winant board, approved by the President, Governmental machinery is at work in a concentration upon the textile industry that sets up a new high mark for Governmental operations of this kind. For the first time in all history the financial condition of the industry is coming under Governmental scrutiny at the hands of the Federal Trade Commission. * * *

"The textile industry is most certainly facing a new day and a higher level. We are engaged in a tremendous organizing campaign. * * * With organization of textile workers the great South will be far on the road to solid and complete unionization, with a resulting improvement in living standards that will be felt in every industry in America. We are going to take the textile industry off a peonage basis at last."

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—Mrs. Hortense McQuarrie Odlum, who "never held a job before" and "never earned a penny in her life," was elected today to the presidency of Bonwit Teller, Inc.

Two years ago, Atlas Corporation, an investment trust, acquired controlling interest in the department store. At that time Floyd B. Odlum, president of the trust, asked his wife to study the store and suggest innovations.

Spain Is Facing New Military Dictatorship

Heavy Fighting Crushes Leading Forces of Rebellion.

and Oviedo also have fallen to the government reinforcements, the aviators said, and the extremists forced back into the mountains.

A stubborn, bloody campaign to reduce that region to submission was forecast, as the fliers graphically described rebel strongholds.

Difficult to approach, the territory is full of insurgent fortified places, they said. Railway transportation has been halted by removing rails, highways and bridges dynamited into impassibility, and tunnels blocked.

Reinforcements Rushed.

Government troops strengthened by detachments that helped take Gijon and Oviedo, are pressing the district ever tighter, they reported. Troops are being moved at forced marches, kept constantly in contact through the air force and radio.

With persistent snipers keeping the flame of revolt alive in the autonomous province of Catalonia, Madrid authorities sought some way to keep the snipers stilled in the capital.

The rebels fired from the top of the Barcelona Cathedral, where they had taken refuge.

The government, its prisoners in Catalonia alone numbering more than 2,000, began preparations to court martial Luis Companys, president of Catalonia, and his aids.

Gen. Domingo Batet, heading Catalonian forces, denied that any prisoners already had been executed.

Fight on Snipers.

In the capital the government considered using autogiros with machine guns mounted to sweep snipers from roofs. Their activities in the course of the day produced no deaths and only 20 injuries, however.

Opening of all schools in Spain, scheduled for today, was postponed as a result of the revolution.

With reports that some leaders of the revolt had fled Spain there came rumors that Indalecio Prieto, Socialist leader and powerful force among the working masses, was busy at Sevilla welding labor into one single front.

There were reports from Lobrono that revolutionaries tonight seized the town of Cervera, taking possession of the armories and partially destroyed two churches before assault guards ousted them. Three rebels were killed and several wounded.

Troops, stanchly loyal to the government, used airplanes, artillery and machine guns to stamp out secession in Catalonia, rebellion in Asturias and sovietism in southern Spain.

Fierce Fighting.

Fiercest fighting of the day occurred at Gijon and Oviedo, where the thunder of the war fleet's big guns smashed rebel resistance. Ships of war cooperated with landing parties in pounding Gijon into submission.

Oviedo, an important munitions manufacturing city, was taken by infantry moving up under cover of the barrage laid down by supporting field artillery, and the insurgents were chased out of the waterworks building into surrounding mountains.

What arms and ammunition the fleeing rebels bore from Oviedo was not known, but reports from Barcelona said guns and bullets found on captured rebels invariably were new.

In the capital itself the government was hard put to repulse stubborn drives that struck at three basic nerve centers—the ministries of war, communications and interior, which together virtually dictate the fight against revolt.

Rebels Driven Back.

Machine gun and rifle fire that swept the famous Castellana boulevard and Puerta del Sol clear of panic-stricken strollers twice drove advancing rebels back. Red Cross squads picked up many wounded.

Along the sunny shores of southernmost Spain, hitherto apathetic to the revolt, communism raised its head as citizens of Pardo del Rey near Cadiz slew their mayor and other dissenters, burned the city hall and all churches, destroyed municipal archives and declared a soviet republic.

Sporadic clashes between soldiers and aroused agrarians continued in Barcelona, and rebels shot and killed Capt. Gonzalo Massono, of the army general staff, as he rode in an automobile.

Other Disorders.

Communication with Asturias, where well-armed striking miners offered stiff opposition to government forces, was virtually impossible. Only scattered calls, too, could get through to Barcelona or other points.

A church was burned at Sevilla, and bomb explosions led soldiers to post machine-gun detachments at vital points. Scores were arrested.

The capital wondered whether the men indicated as leaders of the anarchistic-Communist-Socialist uprising—the worst in the history of the second Spanish republic—might not have escaped.

Border troops between France and Spain reported sighting an airplane flying fast and high from Spain into France, and it was recalled that Arturo Menendez, former Barcelona police chief, who fled when companies yielded, is an aviator.

An official conjecture that Manuel Azana, former premier and potent Leftist leader, might have been with him, led the government to begin checking with French authorities.

Partnership to Be Dissolved

The report comes out of Hollywood that after her next picture the professional association of Marlene Dietrich and Director Josef von Sternberg will be discontinued. This alliance has been productive of some of the most discussed pictures of recent release. The above likeness of Miss Dietrich was posed by Von Sternberg as a characterization test for their last picture together, "Caprice Espagnole." With its softly shadowed lights, it is a photograph of mood and intellect rather than facial formations.

Trash Declared A Fire Hazard

Chief Schrom Asks Citizens to Remove Rubbish in Prevention Week.

Accumulated trash and rubbish were listed as a major fire hazard by Fire Chief Charles E. Schrom in an appeal made yesterday to District residents to observe this week as Fire Prevention Week.

Such accumulations, he said, "not only tend to start fires but greatly increase their spread," adding:

"These fire hazards may take many forms, ranging from old furniture in the attic to fallen leaves under the porch or in the shrubbery around the garage. Eliminate everything that falls within the class of this fire hazard and a large number of fires would be prevented."

The fire chief also urged keeping trash and waste paper away from heating plants, and not letting them accumulate. Rags containing paint or oils are especially hazardous because of danger of spontaneous combustion, he added.

"Don't wait for a fire before you think about what you shall do if one occurs," he continued.

The week in which October 9 falls each year is designated Fire Prevention Week because it is the anniversary of the fire which almost destroyed Chicago many years ago.

Half of his assets were sold to the Hamilton National Bank and depositors were given a 50 per cent dividend. It is to complete payment of claims of creditors and depositors that the assessment was made.

A member of an old Maryland family, Dr. Lumpkin was well known as the physician of prominent families that made up the summer colony of Blue Ridge Summit 20 years ago. In 1914 and in 1930 he came into public prominence when he was reported missing, but on each occasion reappeared.

If you tire easily—don't gamble

Life insurance companies tell us that the gradual breakdown of the human body causes more deaths every year than disease germs

1 If your physical let-down is evidenced by lack of appetite... loss of weight... nervousness... sleeplessness... paleness... a tired feeling or lassitude caused by a lowered red-blood-cell and hemo-glo-bin content in the blood—then S.S.S. is waiting to help you... though, if you suspect an organic trouble, you will, of course, want to consult a physician or surgeon.

Make S.S.S. your health safeguard and, unless your case is exceptional, you should soon enjoy again the satisfaction of appetizing food... sound sleep... and renewed strength.

2 Take a course of S.S.S. Remember, your present run-down condition may have been a slow, gradual process. Likewise, a reasonable time is required to rebuild full strength. S.S.S. is not a miracle worker—no rebuilding tonic is—but it is a scientifically proven and time-tested medicine. This is your guarantee of satisfaction. Its benefits are progressive... accumulative... and enduring.

3 Moreover, S.S.S. is not just a so-called tonic. It is a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also has the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying hemo-glo-bin of the blood. This two-fold purpose is important. Digestion is improved... food is better utilised ...and thus you are enabled to better "carry on" without exhaustion—as you should naturally.

If your condition suggests a tonic... if you tire easily... get a bottle of S.S.S.... take an appetizing portion just before meals. You will find it is truly a blood and body tonic. You should feel and look years younger with life giving and purifying blood surging through your body. You owe this to yourself and friends.

S.S.S. is sold by all drug stores in two convenient sizes. The $2 economy size is twice as large as the $1.25 regular size and is sufficient for two weeks treatment. Begin on the uproad today. S.S.S. is really an inexpensive way to better health and more happiness. So many have said— "S.S.S. makes you feel like yourself again"

Do not be blinded by the efforts of a few unethical dealers who may suggest that you gamble with substitutes. You have a right to insist that S.S.S. be supplied you on request. Its long years of preference is your guarantee of satisfaction.

S.S.S. the world's great blood medicine

School Health Program Here Asked at Once

Conservation Campaign Is Urged by Advisory Committee.

An extensive health conservation campaign among District school children was urged by the Commissioners' advisory committee on school lunches at a meeting with Elwood Street, director of public welfare, in the District Building yesterday.

The committee proposed an emergency and a permanent program. The emergency program called on the Commissioners to refer the whole emergency situation to the health and hospital committee of the Council of Social Agencies for their aid.

Special attention should be given by the health officer to the children now getting school lunches, and those who may be suggested as eligible, the committee said.

Another step in their emergency program should be expansion of the teaching of nutrition as a part of adult education. Mrs. Katharine Ansley, in charge of the school lunches, and Robert L. Haycock, assistant superintendent of schools, were named a committee to study this question.

Funds to employ additional medical school inspectors was listed as the first need in the permanent program. Health, hospital and social agencies should be asked to study and aid the dental clinics, the committee said.

There must be, it was said, more remedial nutritional work and the committee named a special group to develop this phase of the program. The committee is composed of Dr. Louise Stanley, chairman, Mrs. Ansley and Mrs. Marjorie Hazeltine, of FERA.

Child specialists in medicine, dentistry and nutrition should be invited to confer from time to time on the progress and development of the work, the committee declared. Closer cooperation between those in charge of the work and the parent-teacher associations should be developed, it was asserted.

Expansion of public health instruction in the public schools will be sought through a special committe headed by Mr. Haycock, the other members of which are Mrs. Louis B. Casteel, Mrs. James D. Paer, Miss M. Alice Hill, director of emergency relief, and Mrs. John Boyle, jr.

Markers Approved For Safety Zone

Button Type Described as Inadequate Last Year.

Seven hundred button markers, of the type disapproved as inadequate a year ago, are to be used to mark street car safety loading zones under an order approved by the Public Utilities Commission yesterday.

The buttons, it was explained, will be supplied by the street car company. Disapproval of the button markers as inadequate was formally expressed by the commission following a hearing. Long, triangular iron markers in which is embedded an arrow marked out in reflectors was the type then approved. Few of these have been installed. Those which have been, were made at the District prison at Occoquan.

Lack of funds for purchase of more of these markers was given as the explanation. William A. Roberts, peoples' counsel, urged that the Transit company could be required to supply the markers. The button markers will be installed by the Director of Traffic.

Revision of Student Constitution Planned

A revision of the student government constitution at the University of Maryland is foreseen in the call of Warren Tydings, of Davidsonville, Md., president of the Student Government Association, for a meeting of the constitution committee of the executive council.

The committee, which meets tomorrow, will consider the insertion in the constitution of a clearer definition of the Men's and Women's Leagues, component units of the student senate. A plan for a new method of voting for delegates to the Men's League and a revision of the manner of selecting cheer leaders also will be discussed.

Supreme Court Will Pass On Decisions Under NRA

that of the Hegeman Farms Corporation, a wholesale milk distributor in New York, against the New York State milk control board. The court in its last session upheld the New York statute authorizing the board to control the milk industry and to fix minimum prices.

Borden Case to Be Heard.

The Hegeman corporation, however, contends that the orders of the board violate the corporation's constitutional rights, in that the minimum price which it is required to pay farmers is too high and the minimum price which it must charge—which the corporation contended has become a maximum price due to sharp competition—is too low to permit it to earn a return on its investment.

The court yesterday decided to review a similar case instituted by the Borden's Farms Products Co. against the milk board and set it down for hearing on November 5. Both of these cases have aroused widespread interest, since they involve questions being raised in attacks on the NRA and the AAA.

Supreme Court decisions yesterday that were of interest aside from the "New Deal" cases, included a refusal to review the case of the Aluminum Co. of America against the Bausch Machine Tool Co., which involves a $9,000,000 anti-trust suit, and granting of a review of the question of whether the Senate may imprison a person found in its contempt for destroying or secreting papers under subpena.

The latter question arises out of the efforts of the Senate to imprison for ten days William P. McCracken, jr., Washington lawyer, for failing to produce before a committee investigating air-mail contracts papers subpenaed by the committee. Mr. McCracken was charged with permiting the papers in question to be destroyed. His 10-day sentence imposed by the court was upheld in the lower court, but was set aside by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The Aluminum company case is regarded as of great importance by the Justice Department since on its outcome depends, as Attorney General Homer S. Cummings revealed some weeks ago, the Government's plans to prosecute a huge anti-trust suit filed against the company.

The action of the Supreme Court in effect ordered a retrial of the Bausch company's suit for $9,000,000 and was a setback for the Aluminum company, in which the Mellon family of Pittsburgh has a large interest. The trial court originally dismissed the suit but the Second Circuit Court of Appeals held that certain evidence excluded from the case should have been admitted and that a new trial should be had. In an effort to escape this trial the Aluminum company unsuccessfully appealed to the Supreme Court.

The case on which the resolution abrogating the gold clause in contracts will meet its test was instituted by Norman C. Norman, of New York, against the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Owning a $1,000 bond of that carrier, Mr. Norman demanded payment of his interest cupon last February in gold or the equivalent of gold dollars of the weight and fineness in effect when he bought the bond in 1930.

The railroad offered Mr. Norman $22.50 as the semiannual interest payment at 4½ per cent. Mr. Norman demanded $38.10, holding that sum represented the former gold value of $22.50. The lower courts disagreed with Mr. Norman and he has asked the Supreme Court to decide whether Congress can set aside a contract in such manner.

Supreme Court Rejects Appeal

Refuses to Review Case on Damages Awarded Virginia Woman.

The Atlantic Greyhound Lines, Inc., of West Virginia, was refused a review by the United States Supreme Court yesterday of a $3,500 judgment awarded Lucy Metz, of Franklin County, Va., according to the Associated Press.

Alleging that she had been injured near Charleston, W. Va., while a passenger on a bus operated by the company, Miss Metz brought suit in Federal District Court of Western Virginia by serving notice of suit on F. A. Davis, of Lexington, Va., proprietor of the McCrum Drug Co. store, as agent for the company.

The validity of the service was contested by the company, which claimed it was not doing business in Virginia and denied that Davis was an agent on whom notice could be legally served.

The service was upheld as valid by the district court and a jury award of $3,500 was sustained by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Intimidation Charges Probed.

Phoenix, Ariz., Oct. 8 (AP).—E. E. Cota, Mexican consul, said today he is investigating reports that Mexican laborers employed by Japanese farmers in the Sal River Valley are being intimidated.

White House Social Staff Will Work in Luxurious Suite

Will Leave Basement Quarters When Offices Are Remodeled.

The importance of the evolution of social affairs at the White House has been recognized in plans to assign a luxurious suite of rooms, probably overlooking the fountain court in the remodeled Executive offices, to the corps of secretaries, State Department representatives and clerks of the White House social bureau. In the official season this corps numbers about 27.

The social bureau has been quartered in the basement of the White House and often has its work seriously hampered by lack of office space. The entire work of sending out invitations and compiling guest lists under the direction of Mrs. Roosevelt is centered in the bureau, which also dispatches the work of a more personal social nature for President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

After the establishment of the social bureau in the Executive offices there will be no offices of any kind in the White House proper, except the small corridor alcove of Mrs. Malvina Schneider, secretary to Mrs. Roosevelt, and the studies of President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Mrs. Roosevelt praised the Government architects in charge of the remodeling of the Executive offices at her press conference yesterday morning. She pointed out that the Executive office has its same general form as before the remodeling began. She said the architects had consulted with workers in the offices of the architects who were in charge of the remodeling and adding of the Executive offices of the White House in the Theodore Roosevelt Administration.

Crash Death Inquest Today

Woman Killed on Way to Ask Help at Police Station.

A coroner's inquest will be held at noon today in the death of Mrs. Lucille Brown, 37, killed Sunday when she was struck by an automobile in front of the First Precinct Police Station.

Mrs. Brown, en route to enlist police aid after an alleged beating, darted into a line of heavy traffic and was hurled unconscious into the street. Dr. A. Magruder MacDonald said she suffered a fractured skull.

The woman, police were told, hailed a passing motorist in front of her home in the 400 block of K street northwest and asked to be taken to the nearest police station. The motorist, Anthon Thalmayer, also of the 400 block of K street northwest, told police Mrs. Brown said she was in "serious truble."

Investigators said a man, believed to be her assailant, would be summoned to the inquest. Injuries received when she was struck by the automobile were blamed for her death, however.

Maryland U. Freshmen To Nominate Officers

Nomination of freshman class officers at the University of Maryland will be made today at a mass meeting to be held in the university auditorium.

Plans will be discussed for the annual freshman-sophomore "struggle," which has taken the place of the traditional tug-of-war as a result of the near-riot that was precipitated last year when the classes reported for the tugging contest. The date of the interclass contest will be announced after the election of freshman officers.

The class will vote on the nominees on Tuesday, October 15.

Virginia Jobless to Aid Better Housing Program

Richmond, Va., Oct. 8 (AP).—Local relief directors and project engineers are instructed by William A. Smith, State emergency relief administration director, to make an effort to remove workers from relief rolls and place them on jobs developed as the better housing campaign progresses in the State.

As a further measure of cooperation with the Federal Housing Administration's home improvement campaign, Smith has authorized the use of relief labor, either of manual or professional character, to assist local committees in developing interest in the better housing campaign. The committees, however, can not use nonrelief labor at the expense of the FERA.

Colored glass lends a smart note to the shelves of the breakfast room—and the hand-rubbed finish of Baker authentic 18th Century furniture reproductions is particularly noteworthy.

Livable 18th Century furniture with off-white accessories is the scheme of the Larger Apartment—while in the Smaller Apartment, maple furniture reproductions, braided rugs, and chintz draperies lend a charming atmosphere.

Farm Census Spurs Battle On Patronage

25,000 Jobs to Be Given Out Under Program Starting Soon.

spring in the House. The farm census bill moved through under an earlier authorization.

Even under the greatly restricted program, Republicans in Congress sense a patronage raid in which they will have little if any share. Led by Representative Bertrand H. Snell, minority leader, they argue the regular decenniel census is all that is necessary. They point to census counts of various kinds already conducted by CWA workers, and existing authorization for the Labor Department to make additional checks. They charge there is further significance in the close proximity of election day and plans for the farm enumeration.

As opposed to this, Director Austin contends the proposed canvass is of unusual importance at this time "not only because of the devastation and havoc wrought by the drought, but because of the changes in farms and ranches and in the utilization of land brought about by the distressing economic conditions of recent years."

All Jobs Are Temporary.

Although all of the 25,000 jobs are but temporary, and most of them for only 30 days' duration, Democrats who have been fruitlessly trying to place their constituents in bureaus already abundantly manned, are putting in their bids. They estimate the program will provide 50 to 60 jobs for every Congressional farm district.

Pressure for patronage in recent weeks had virtually reached an impasse. With organization of the new Housing Administration, the last wholesale opportunity for patronage had gone aglimmering. Now they have fresh hopes for politically marketable plums, their Republican colleagues charge.

Democratic clamor for jobs last session reached a point where it threatened to disrupt the entire Administration program in a general House rebellion. Several party caucuses were held, and a special committee was set up in the interest of patronage. The committee made little headway. Its chairman, Representative Ralph F. Lozier, of Missouri, later was beaten for reelection. Representative James McClintic, of Oklahoma, who formed a special patronage committee of his own, also was beaten. Leaders say it is improbable either committee will be revived next session.

Will Train Force Here.

Plans for the January 1 farm census call for training a special force of 80 "area supervisors" in Washington. About 35 will be selected from this group and sent into the field next month to train other supervisors, clerks and enumerators. Under present plans only the Washington force will be subject to Civil Service.

Director Austin said the 1935 farm questionnaire will ask only about one-third of the questions carried in the 1930 census sheet, but will cover every angle of the agriculture industry. He is attempting to place sample copies of the questionnaire in the hands of every farmer immediately, to give time for thorough study and preparation of the information called for.

After the check, he wants to tabulate the data at once "because the resulting statistics are required at the earliest possible moment so that agriculture may be assisted in going ahead with other industry.

Questions will deal with farm tenure; farm acreage, which includes all crop land, all pasture land and all farm woodland; the total farm value; acreage and yield of each of the principal field crops; number of trees and yield of the principal fruits and nuts; number and value of each class of live stock; poultry and eggs, and farm population.

McAdoo Returning Here Singing New Deal Praise

Strange as it seems, the late President Paul von Hindenburg of Germany was an actor in the first motion picture he ever saw. He saw his first movie in 1929. It was a news reel viewed by the President at a special showing in the offices of the National Censorship in Berlin. The news reel's principal figure was the President himself.

In the third game of the 1921 World Series, played between the New York Yanks and the New York Giants, a new record was set for hits in a series game. The Giants, with Barnes on the mound, made 20 hits to win a 13-5 victory over the Yanks. It was the Giants' first win of the series which they eventually won with five victories out of eight games.

In the above puzzle you are given three houses in a row, and a power plant, gas supply, and water supply adjacent as shown. The problem is to lay water lines, gas pipes, and electric wires into each house without any of the pipes or wires crossing over each other. Can you do it?

Tomorrow: The league series that was won single-handed.

Opening Drive, Ritchie Urges Unified Party

At Leonardtown, He Scores G. O. P. Platform and Rests on Record.

Leonardtown, Md., Oct. 8 (AP). — Approximately 1,000 packed Duke's Auditorium and jammed the streets outside today to hear Gov. Albert C. Ritchie describe the Republican platform as "inconsequential" in the opening speech of a county campaign tour.

Voicing a plea for a united party front in the November 6 elections, Gov. Ritchie said:

"It is perfectly right for Democrats to disagree and assert contrasting opinions before the primaries, but after the candidate has been named they should unite and face a common foe."

Citing his record in office as his strongest argument for reelection, he claimed the Republican party had made no specific charges against his record, but had filled its platform with "generalities." He described the G. O. P. platform as exemplary of "a fellow outside, trying to get in" and said it was "full of vote-getting devices."

The State tax rate, he said, has been decreased 40 per cent during his term of office, pointing out that taxes in St. Marys County had been lowered from $1.49 two years ago, to 92 cents in 1934.

He said State expenditures had been reduced from $86,000,000 in 1932 to $29,000,000 in 1904. He challenged any other State in the Union to equal Maryland's record.

Much of the praise for this reduction of expenditure, he said, is due to the efforts in the Legislature of J. L. Coad, candidate for reelection to the State Senate, and former political foe of the Ritchie ticket, and other St. Marys County legislators. The Governor's indorsement of Coad was seen by observers to mean that the rift between the two had been definitely smoothed over and harmony restored.

Praise of New Deal policies was voiced by George L. Radcliffe, candidate for election to the United States Senate, who attacked the Maryland Republican party for allegedly attempting to "steal the smoke" of the Democratic National platform.

"The Republicans in this State had no platform," he said, "and could find no fault with our National platform, so adopted it."

Revised Sewage Plant Contract Is Handed to District by Ickes

PWA Head Indicates He Will Hold Whip Hand on Construction.

Construction of an $8,000,000 sewage disposal plant at Blue Plains by midsummer of 1936 appeared probable yesterday after Public Works Administrator Ickes signed and sent to the District Commissioners a contract with strings on it.

The Commissioners last night had not had time to study an elaborate work schedule offered by Ickes as a sort of ultimatum, but it was indicated they would sign the contract and swallow whatever rebuttal words might occur to them.

After a summer's uncertainty, it appears that either a substantial portion or all of the PWA loan will be deposited to the credit of the District in the Treasury before the end of this month and that the plant will be in operation within two years.

In a four-page letter to the Commissioners, Ickes made it clear he intended to hold the whip hand over them throughout the two years. He also intimated strongly that the more expensive activated sludge plant must be built.

Wants $8,000,000 Plant.

This type of plant was recommended by the special board of engineers financed by a previous $40,000 PWA loan. While its estimated cost is $8,000,000, as compared with about $6,000,000 for a chemical treatment plant, the cost of maintenance of the former is less.

Together with the letter, Ickes sent a new contract to replace a previous document and varied from the customary PWA procedure by signing it before the loan applicant.

The major additions in the new contract were a provision that all contracts must provide for completion of the work on or before September 1, 1936; that the District is responsible for repayment of only 70 per cent of the amount expended, the balance returning to PWA, and that the interest of 4 per cent will not begin until three years from the first PWA payment.

Countermanding a simple schedule submitted by the Commissioners suggesting a design period of eight months and a construction period of 42 months, Ickes set up an elaborate schedule, fixing dates on which the drawings must be ready, the bids received, and the contruction completed.

Holds D. C. to Schedule.

"Unless I am given some reason for noncompliance not yet mentioned," Ickes wrote, "I shall require the District to conform substantially to the above schedule, which has been computed upon the experience of other municipal corporations in constructing sewage disposal plants similar to that proposed for the District."

While suggesting a 42-month construction period, the Commissioners in their letter said that it would be possible to complete the major features so as to have the plant in operation by the fall of 1936.

Such a course, they added, would not allow as much time as "may be desirable for mature deliberation and study of some portions of the design."

Ickes replied: "I do not understand what further 'mature deliberation and study' should be necessary in view of the fact that the District has already expended the sum of $40,000 for an investigation with regard to the sewage disposal plant and the report of the investigating committee has been before the Commissioners since December, 1933.

"It seems clear that those decisions which remain to be made can be made in such time that it will be possible to have the plant in operation long before four years elapse."

Replies to Charge of Delay.

The Public Works administrator apparently resented the suggestion of the Commissioners that the sewage plant might already be under contract "had funds been made available immediately" after the allocation was announced in early summer.

"It would not have been proper for the Public Works Administration to advance funds to the District until the proposed agreement between the United States of America and the District of Columbia had been executed," he wrote, "for otherwise neither the Commissioners nor the PWA would know upon what terms and conditions the funds might be advanced and material matters such as the date when interest would begin to run on the money borrowed and the date of completion of the plant had been settled.

"To advance funds without a meeting of minds on vital points would not have been consistent with sound business practice which, I take it, is identical with sound Government procedure."

Sees Saving on Engineers.

Ickes also suggested that the District Commissioners might save between $50,000 and $75,000 by permitting the District's own engineers to supervise construction after the plans are drawn.

In a tentative agreement with Metcalf & Eddy, consulting engineers, of Boston, an arrangement was suggested whereby the engineers would be retained in a consulting capacity throughout the construction period and for the first year's operation.

Any engineer consultation required after the construction contracts are awarded, Ickes suggested, could be obtained on a per diem basis.

Reiterating his insistence on speed, as set forth in a previous letter, Ickes said:

"Time is of the essence. It is time that employment in the District should be increased. It is time that a metropolitan region like the District should be provided with modern facilities for the adequate treatment of sewage."

The Commissioners in their letter stated that the special board of engineers had estimated that construction of an activated sludge plan would occupy 670 workmen for three years and nine months and an additional 320 workmen indirectly.

Sultan to Speed Plans.

Lieut. Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, said last night he would confer with his aids in the sanitary division today and probably would be ready to make a recommendation to the Commissioners regarding the signing of the contract at once.

The schedule of construction submitted by Ickes, carrying the dates when the work on each of the several units should be completed, follows:

Contracts to be completed.	Approx. cost.
Pumping station and grit chamber, Oct. 1, 1935	$300,000

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

It's All Mighty Curious.

Nothing could have surprised Mr. Man any more than for Hee-Haw to come back to him, and it is certain tha tnothing could have made him happier. He unhitched him from the wagon and gave him some water and gave him more supper than two donkeys could eat. And even Mrs. Man had to get out of bed and come out to see if Hee-Haw had really come back. It seemed too good to be true.

Yes, that certainly was their own good Hee-Haw, and that was their wagon, but where on earth were all of the things that they had put in the wagon that morning? That was a question that only Hee-Haw could answer, and he couldn't speak their language. But they had some more hogs and turkeys and potatoes and other thingss, but they didn't have any other donkey, and so they decided that they were pretty lucky to get Hee-Haw back. But it was awfully puzzling.

Who in the world was that great big man that made those curious tracks, and where did he live? Meybe Hee-Haw just stole away from him when he wasn't looking. It was all mighty curious, and Mr. Man and his wife stayed awake and talked it nearly all the rest of the night. But they went to sleep after a while and when they woke again it was because Hee-Haw was ringing his regular old rising bell, and they woke again it was because Hee-Haw was ringing his regular old rising bell, and they never had heard any music that sounded as sweet.

Mr. Man didn't go away from the house all day. He stayed around home, and cut up and salted down the one hog that he had left in his smoke-house the day before, and he helped his wife with her sausage and spare-ribs and things. And they had so much to talk about that their tongues were as busy all day as their hands were.

And for Blackie Bear and that thanks note: How was he so thankful for what that great big curious man had taken from the wagon unless they lived together? And if they lived together, it wasn't Blackie Bear at all, but was some tame bear that this curious man had got somewhere since Blackie was killed, and was just playing him off for Blackie.

They say peoples' ears burn when somebody is talking about them, and if it is true, it's a wonder that all the hair on Jocko's head wasn't terribly singed, for they certainly did talk about him. And every time they talked about him he was bigger and bigger.

"If you keep on growing this fast for a little while longer, you will be as big as a schoolhouse, in their eyes," said Jay Bird to Jocko that night when he went home after loafing around over at Mr. Man's most all day.

"Well," said Jocko, "they need something that looks like a schoolhouse to help them learn as much as Blackie knows. Blackie knows how to make other people work for him and for themselves, but Mr. Man and his wife don't."

Homes Yield Loot From Winchester

Silver and Merchandise in Robberies Uncovered.

Winchester, Va., Oct. 8 (Spl.).—Following the arrest in West Virginia of six men Saturday, a search of two dwellings near Lost City, W. Va., and of rooms here has revealed merchandise and other effects identified by officers as coming from stores and railroad stations in Shenandoah County at Toms Brooks, which had been robbed at intervals over several months.

Among the property was silverware identified as property of Admiral Butler, U. S. N. (retired), taken about a year ago from his cottage at Orkney Springs. It was valued at $600.

The combined efforts of police from this State and West Virginia resulted in J. W. Shoemaker and five of his sons, Arthur, of Winchester; Haden, Elbert, Amos and Lee Shoemaker, being taken in custody. The father and Arthur are charged with receiving stolen goods.

Fascist Optimism.

"Neither honors nor jobs nor profits—only duty and combat." This is the grim future promised the regimented youth of Italy by the Fascist party. By this formula it hopes to keep in thrall the hopes and aims and dreams of adolescence. Well, perhaps . . .

Some 250,000 boys, none older than 21, faced Achille Starace, secretary of the Fascist party, and heard him pronounce what to the youth of any democratic country would seem like sentence of death. True, he talked of patriotism—a subject that has always appealed to youth—in telling them of what lies ahead. But what kind of patriotism is it that eliminates the appeal of voluntary sacrifice in favor of a convict subordination to the state?

But is it true that Italy's fascism promises to none of its youth neither honors nor jobs nor profits? None, it is certain, may openly and safely seek the honors, the jobs or the profits that the outstanding Fascists have taken for themselves. But are there not minor dictatorships under the dictator? For these many will strive, have striven, are striving.

For all youth is not without imagination. All youth is not willing to be told when to step and when to stop. And there may be some who will take these words not as an order, but as a challenge. Optimistic indeed is the Fascist party if it thinks youth will always listen without feeling pangs of that inner rebellion which will always be an essential part of the spirit of youth.

A Successful Experiment.

President Roosevelt's conviction that the kind of work done by the Civilian Conservation Corps "must go on" is shared by all who have examined the actual achievements of this experimental venture into an untried field. The costs may have been somewhat greater than necessary, although opinions on that point differ. But the positive benefits have been well worth the outlay.

The young men enrolled in this civilian army have been given an opportunity to do thoroughly useful work in a thoroughly beneficial environment. They have had many of the advantages that come from compulsory military training, while receiving the kind of constructive direction that fits them for civilian life.

In return they have done a great deal to carry out an afforestation program that will assist conservation of our National resources. These direct benefits, and the indirect benefits resulting from the fact that the CCC workers are helping to support their families out of their earnings, undoubtedly warrant the continuance of an organization which has been one of the most constructive features of the New Deal.

Moreover, the gains can not be measured entirely by positive accomplishments. The CCC has gone far toward eliminating the serious problems created by the migration of youths and young boys drifting aimlessly without prospect of employment. The social demoralization resulting from the existence of a transient population of this sort, which was rapidly assuming alarming proportion, can hardly be exaggerated.

With the aid of Army officers who have been extraordinarily successful in adapting their disciplinary methods to the requirements of civilian groups, not always easy to handle, the CCC has rescued young men as well as trained them. The outlay has therefore been repaid in many intangible ways that do not lend themselves to precise appraisal.

Heroism.

He is not a hero who wins a baseball game. He is an ephemeral idol who earns a salary of from $2,000 to $20,000 a year—sometimes more—for work which well might be called play. He is not a hero, who captains a victorious football team. He is a darling of undergrads and alumni, having won honor for his college, fame for himself and the plaudits of spectators. He is not necessarily a hero, the officer who leads a successful charge against the enemy and escapes unhurt. He is a man who has done his duty and his emolument will be enriched by medals and life-long adulation.

But Chief Pharmacist's Mate Thomas C. Stebbins, U. S. N., was a hero—"a person of distinguished valor and fortitude"—whose posthumous fame should live long after taps have sounded over his body, and whose widow and young children should receive from Congress the reward which it is impossible to give the man.

The local navy yard called for volunteers to undergo a test which might demonstrate a preventive for the dreaded "bends"—excruciating muscular cramps experienced after the body has been subjected to the pressure of deep water. Stebbins knew that there was no glory for him if everything went well; that there was grave risk if it did not. And he stepped forward.

At intervals during six weeks he took his place in the tank which was used for experimentation. Gradually the pressure was increased, then as gradually diminished. The upshot was that the man collapsed and died in agony.

The Self-Help Movement.

On the same day that leaders in the cooperative movement gather in Washington to discuss development of self-help enterprises for the unemployed, a strong protest against the development of FERA factories is made by the National Association of Manufacturers. This is no mere coincidence. It represents, on the one side, full recognition of present opportunities for emphasizing the ideal of production for use instead of profit. It represents, on the other side, full recognition of the effect of such a program on our present economic system.

The case of the protesting manufacturers is supported by their assertion that "the Government plants will, generally speaking, produce only necessities, which would have to be purchased from private manufacturers and dealers were it not for the FERA plants." This is wholly true only on the assumption that the Government would buy from private manufacturers, for distribution to the destitute, the same articles which the self-help factories would produce. It is evident that this form of State intervention would not be distasteful to the N. A. M.

There is, however, unquestionable force to the manufacturers' protest attacking that Government competition "which simply shifts employment from private to public enterprise." Such competition may readily undermine capitalism. But it is not at all apparent that it will accomplish anything constructive toward economic recovery or solution of the unemployment problem. Realization of this recently caused the FERA to drop its very dangerous plan for financing the manufacture of shoes for distribution among the needy. Such a plan might easily throw out of work in one place more operatives than it employed in another.

Those who are anxious only to see relief handled in a way which maintains the morale of the unemployed without retarding recovery will look for a golden mean between the two extremes. There will be much criticism of the suggestion that private industry should be safeguarded by Government purchases for free distribution to the needy. There must be outright antagonism to Federal subsidization of inefficient "self-help" factories in direct competition with hard-pressed private industry.

But if real self-help is the aim, there is much to be said for the theory of cooperative enterprise, particularly when thousands of highly-skilled workers are losing morale and becoming increasingly embittered because of unemployment which has come through no fault of their own. For such workers, along relatively modest lines, in cooperation with, rather than in antagonism to, local business, something can doubtless be done to provide constructive employment and reduce the drain of direct relief. Handled carefully, with demonstrated efficiency as the test of its continuation, such a movement may assist rather than retard recovery.

Private enterprise is none the weaker in Denmark and England because the cooperative movement in those countries has tended to develop from rural to urban projects. But the movement has made headway there simply because the cooperatives have stood on their own feet, and have not been preserved, regardless of inefficiency, by governmental subsidies calculated to cripple private enterprise.

The Falling Pound.

Recent sharp declines in sterling exchange have given rise to renewed uneasiness among the continental gold bloc countries. As sterling declines in value the competition of British goods increases in foreign markets and enhances the deflationary pressure upon the price levels of the continental gold bloc countries at a most critical time.

It seems probable that we are now witnessing a resumption of British efforts to depreciate the pound in order to offset the effect of devaluation of the dollar. At any rate, that has been the result of the prolonged and recently accentuated drop in the pound. Although various reasons are given for the pronounced weakness of sterling, it is surmised that the British have passively, if not actively, facilitated the downward movement.

For a time it was hoped that, with the dollar and sterling again close to their old exchange rate, some sort of stabilization agreement might result—at least of a provisional nature. However, the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated last week that no attempt was being made through equalization fund "to fix the exchange at a given point or even to maintain it with a fixed limit of value in the face of and in opposition to seasonal or other powerful influences."

From the French side of the Channel Le Temps pointed out recently that a solution of the problems created by the recent growing exchange demoralization lay with Great Britain. The exchange could be stabilized if the British government so willed, according to this semiofficial authority, which sharply criticized the tendency to make the uncertain position of the franc an excuse for delay.

Once before Great Britain overplayed her hand when she encouraged the United States to resort to depreciation by delaying return to a stable exchange basis and lauding the advantages of a managed currency. The result was a forfeiture of these alleged advantages, to a large extent, through competitive depreciation and subsequent devaluation of the dollar.

It is easy enough to agree with the British assertion that the continental gold currencies are overvalued. But it is also well to remember that this overvaluation has been aggravated, if not produced, by the policies pursued by Great Britain and the United States. The situation would only be made worse if the hard-pressed gold bloc countries were now to give up the struggle to protect their currencies, and proceed to devalue in their turn.

Such action would not solve the problems of price adjustment, but would merely change the character of the difficulties. The British, too, would find in the end that they had paid dearly for a momentary advantage. There is no long-range benefit to any country from increasing disturbances to international trade. These ultimately can only be eliminated by a return to stable exchanges based on the gold standard.

Reflex Action.

The telephone rang in the office of the Secretary of State on Saturday and it was Ambassador Claude Bowers calling, presumably collect, from Madrid. The riot of rebellion sounded outside his door. While the disturbance may have meant hopes fulfilled for thousands of earnest Spanish souls, the whole affair must be proving rather annoying to Mr. Bowers. After all, revolutions are something to write about, not to participate in. Historians should never live through the acts of violence that are the makings of their books.

The Hoosier Bowers, however, is an historian by avocation only. This doubtless has tinged the Spanish rebellion differently for him. His emotions were undoubtedly mixed. For Mr. Bowers, long before he became an historian—before, even, he became Democratic keynoter, or a judge of the military acumen of Gen. Jackson—was a newspaper man. And although he spent most of his time in the relatively peaceful sanctum of the editorial writer, a newspaper man after all is a newspaperman. And when something happens, the first reaction is to reach for the phone.

The dignity of the historian, had it been uppermost, would have cautioned the historian of the Tragic Era, and of the beginnings of democracy under Jefferson and Hamilton, to have moved slowly. But the nervous urge of the man whose typewriter once was battered in wearying effort to catch all deadlines could not be downed. So Mr. Bowers reached for the phone.

The brilliant Spanish sunshine, with its languorous shadows must have looked good to Claude Bowers when word came that he was to be Ambassador to that land of romance. Death in the afternoon was not what he sought. Instead quiet, and a chance to study, to work at his books, and to live the scholastic life devoid of the haste and hurry that had been so much of his past. But dreams are dreamed only to be shattered, and contemplation never lasts.

So, when the bombs burst and the bugles blared and revolution stalked the streets, the historian momentarily went into retirement. And Claude Bowers, newspaperman, reached for his phone.

Sop To Solomon

Three important announcements in the field of anthropology prove beyond a doubt the truism in Solomon's remark that "There's nothing new under the sun."

From such distant parts of the world as Colorado, Alaska and Germany come these so-called "startling" finds. A Field Museum party uncovers a large "kiva" of 1,000 years ago in Colorado and Dr. Martin, leader of the party, says that these kivas, or rooms, must have been built for ceremonial uses. There follows the assumption that they were used for meetings of secret societies of men. Shades of the Klan! So conventions and parades and costumes were also a part of prehistoric man's alibi for nocturnal freedom!

In Kodiak, Alaska, Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology of the Smithsonian, believes that he has at last found a solution to the enigma of "nest burials." He has long pondered a reason for a cultured people burying their dead in heaps without regard to sex or age and with no sign of mortuary ceremony. In the cracked skulls of the skeletons and in other evident signs of combat, he finds the clew. C'est la guerre! And are we mystified at such massacres on the part of relatively civilized people? "In Flanders fields the poppies blow, between the crosses, row on row."

And in Germany, Prof. Johannes Weigelt, director of the Geological-Paleontological Institute of Halle University, finds it of sufficient novelty to announce that 25,000,000 years ago drought brought death to herds of strange wild beasts. Our Western farmers will not question his discovery.

One marvels at the perennial enthusiasm of leaders of archaeological explorations. Theirs is the unshaken faith that transcends all precedence. To wander thousands of miles in space and millions of years in time is undoubtedly fascinating. But what do we find that Solomon did not know?

A meteorologist is predicting a severe winter. We hope he's the same bird who said we'd have a cool summer this year.

Mr. Beck Reviews The Record.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post recently printed a letter from a Mr. Ambrose Julian Fahy, who took the occasion of my retirement from Congress to impeach my sincerity. It is a pity that Mr. Fahy, in doing so, was not more careful about his facts. He states that when my seat was contested, when I entered Congress in 1926, I was seated "without even a roll call." Had he consulted the Congressional Record he would have found that this was not true.

The question of my eligibility turned upon the meaning of the word "inhabitant," as used in the Constitution. My contention was that the word "inhabitant" was the equivalent of the word "citizen," and did not turn wholly upon the question of either residence or domicile. I showed, by the colonial charters, running back to the very beginning of colonial government, that the word "inhabitant" had that clearly defined and generally accepted meaning. That I was a "citizen" of Pennsylvania, in which I was born and in which I had lived the greater part of my life, did not admit of dispute.

This view was taken by a majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and was accepted by an overwhelming majority of the House of Representatives on a formal roll call. All the Republicans except one voted in my favor, and more than one-half of the Democrats adopted the same view. I felt that I had rendered a service to the cause of Constitutional government in thus establishing an important principle, for there are many citizens of a State who have a residence in that State, and also a permanent residence in Washington.

I should not trouble myself to write this much except that Mr. Fahy, who might have given me credit for an honest opinion, even though he differed with it, has seen fit to impeach the sincerity of my devotion to our form of government.

JAMES M. BECK.

Not To Be Confused

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Washington Post Magazine of Sunday, September 30, contains an article entitled "With Magnets and Hand-Waving, Mesmer Drew Out Hysterical Ills," in which it is stated of Franz Anton Mesmer that he was "the ancestor (in certain ways) of everything from theosophy to spiritualism, from Christian Science to Freudian and Adlerian psychotherapy."

I would like to correct any erroneous impression that might be gained from this statement with reference to Christian Science. Christian Science was discovered by Mary Baker Eddy in 1866. This unfoldment came to her as the result of many years, of careful, prayerful search for the method of healing used by Christ Jesus. In that search she delved into a number of systems, including Mesmerism (or animal magnetism), thinking that she might find therein the secret she sought.

Animal magnetism did not appeal to Mrs. Eddy as a means of healing. In fact, she consistently and firmly opposed its use. This is plainly evident from the fact that one of the chapters in her textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," is entitled "Animal Magnetism Unmasked."

The discoverer and founder of Christian Science declares repeatedly in her writings that Christian Science is founded on the Bible. On page 126 of "Science and Health" she says: "I have found nothing in ancient or in modern systems on which to found my own, except the teachings and demonstrations of our great Master and the lives of prophets and apostles. The Bible has been my only authority. I have had no other guide in 'the straight and narrow way' of truth."

It is therefore quite pertinent to say that Christian Science is a religion, that it is the distinct discovery of Mrs. Eddy as the result of her study of the Scriptures, and that her Science is thus not to be confused with any of the systems mentioned in your article.

History Repeats Itself.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The current agitation against the alleged diabolical influence of the munition makers recalls to the writer the following historical incident:

On the eve of the American Revolution, after the Boston Tea incident and the subsequent coercive acts had made war practically unavoidable, a "most extraordinary petition" was received by the House of Commons from Birmingham, England. Although most of the merchant and manufacturing interests at the time favored a policy of conciliation and peace for purely commercial reasons, the Birmingham petitioners asked for a strict enforcement of the extreme measures taken against Boston, a policy that could only mean war. Why was this particular locality so "apprehensive (as the petition read) that any relaxation in the execution of the law respecting the Colonies of Great Britain will ultimately tend to the injury of the Commerce of this Town and Neighbourhood"? A sharp and uncomplimentary answer to this question was soon forthcoming from the mercantile and manufacturing interests, who were feeling in a loss of trade the effects of the colonial nonimportation policy. The "Birmingham Knaves" were charged with wishing to involve America in a war with the Mother Country so that their interests could profit "in making Stands of Arms for both Parties." In fact, the charges continued, the Birmingham manufacturers were even now supplying arms to America via Holland!

Further readings in the newspapers of the time show quite a few attacks on the alleged mercenary motives of the particular petitioners who called "patriotically" for drastic measures against the colonies at the moment, a war-making policy that would at the same time bring a large degree of prosperity to Birmingham. One friend of the colonies was even prompted to pen the following rhyme which appeared in the London Packet for April 26, 1775, referring to the above petition:

You petition'd the King, against Liberty, truth,
And pray did you do it to show your great care?
(Alas tis a pity you open'd your mouth)
For alas! its contents were but
Birmingham ware!

Since you pray'd our good Monarch to cut all their throats,
And plunge them at once in a sea of despair;
I suppose as he kindly attended your votes
The arms that you sent them were Birmingham ware.

And so it would seem, if we accept the contemporary newspaper accounts which reveal the foregoing incident, that the makers of war supplies in Birmingham, England, were not reluctant to supply the English colonies in America with the arms the provincials were shortly to use against the Mother Country herself. Furthermore, it would likewise seem that the same arms interests were not averse to promoting their own concerns indirectly by urging upon the government an imperial policy calculated to precipitate more quickly a clash of arms.

Less Talk!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As joint owner of a productive farm in southwestern Pennsylvania, where the farmers usually have excellent crops, I should like to make a suggestion. It is addressed to those who have made a "ridiculous farce" by their unnecessary wailings about the poor farmer. They should dedicate their efforts to crying a while for the relief of people who live in the villages, towns and cities, where they have no earthly chance to "grow things for their table," but must depend upon their wages and the markets for their foodstuffs.

The hard, cold facts are exactly these: As soon as the general public gets together and devises ways and means to increase industrial employment—so that the poor devils living in the cities can have work with which to earn money to spend for life's many requirements and necessities—just so soon will the farmers be relieved—and not sooner!

Even though I possessed the wealth of Montezuma and was lost on the desert, what good would my money be? And the same condition holds true with the people of the United States of the America of today.

The farmer has the produce—but the consumer has no money—and there you are!

What America needs most is more work and less talk.

Differs With Quillen.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read Mr. Quillen's daily comments regularly. Hitherto I have invariably admired them for their accuracy, shrewdness and sound common sense.

But in that on the one-man submarine in The Post of September 24 he has, in my opinion, departed from all three of his usual qualities. The one-man submarine is not a new invention, it has already been proved a failure.

As I recall it, a man named Shearer invented one which was tested more than once during the World War. It failed to show any of the many important qualities claimed for it.

A very little imagination is needed to reveal obvious objections. The radius of action of the craft itself would necessarily confine its operations to a limited sector. That would mean that scores of thousands would be needed to protect our long coast line, which could be more effectively and economically protected by agencies already existing. The cost would be prohibitive for a weapon with very limited offensive and defensive value.

Where would one get the scores of thousands of prodigies necessary to man them? The operator would have to be the engineer, navigator, gunnery officer, communications officer, cook and watch. Picture him at sea, seeking out and engaging the enemy! With one hand he works the periscope, with another he works the throttle; he steers with a third; with a fourth he sets his sights and holds them on the target; with a fifth he works his radio communications; with a sixth he fires his torpedo. What a man!

Hatchet and Cherry Tree

Postoffice, Tuesday.

At least one strong voice has been raised in approval of this Column's recent reference to the Rev. Mason Locke Weems and that inability to lie from which he said George Washington suffered. It is the voice of Mr. Grover Ayers, Washingtonian. And we hasten to record it because it is his, because it is strong, because it raises an interesting issue—and, of course, because it does approve.

"Thanks," writes Mr. Ayers, "for your remembering Parson Weems—a much neglected man. His life story is one of the most fascinating in early American annals of men who did things worthy of the time.

"That biographers of today do not write with the same gusto of solemnity only means that the manner of writing biographies has changed. I say this because it seems that the crime charged against this really admirable man was that he did not follow the method of the modern biographer, who has generally stated a system of geometric facts and left out the imaginative and interpretative coloring suited to the character of the subject under discussion.

"So the modern fiend for facts, not finding that Washington's and Weems' contemporaries did say that George 'took a hack at the cherry tree'—presto, it did not occur! And Weems, therefore, is ranged as a Baron Munchausen. But Weems, in his biography of Washington, said that an old lady, an intimate friend of the Washingtons, told him the anecdote. . . . Are these moderns better situated to say what George did not do, than Weems was situated to say what George did do, on that historic occasion?

"Several very eminent men here in Washington," Mr. Ayers concludes, "are more willing to accept the word of Weems—who was on the spot to get the anecdote from the old lady—than they are to accept the opinion of the present-day authorities—who, like Will Rogers, know only what they see in the papers. Personally, I am of the opinion that Weems is the better authority. And I can believe without much violence to my understanding that the Washingtons did have an old lady friend who had known little George. I'm for Parson Weems."

Well, so are we.

What if we are in a minority? Minorities are important, despite the somewhat obvious fact that they are minorities. Consider the trouble they give the League of Nations. Consider the fact that a minority put over Prohibition and kept it over until it was over in another sense. Consider St. Athanasius against the world. And consider the cry of Swinburne:

"While three men hold together,
The kingdoms are less by three."

Of course, we could wish that Mr. Ayers would reveal the names of those other eminent Washingtonians who agree with us—or that these gentlemen would step forward on their own good feet. Yet, after all, just what did Weems say?

Let's look at an authentic text, that of the 1810 edition. After telling of the gift of the little hatchet, with which delighted George, "was constantly going about chopping everything," the parson continues:

"One day, in the garden, where he often amused himself hacking his mother's pea-sticks, he unluckily tried the edge of his hatchet on the body of a beautiful young English cherry tree, which he barked so terribly, that I don't believe the tree ever got the better of it. The next morning the old gentleman finding out what had befallen his tree, which, by the way, was a great favorite, came into the house, and with much warmth asked for the mischievous author, declaring at the same time that he would not have taken five guineas for his tree. Nobody could tell him anything about it. Presently George and his hatchet made their appearance. George, said his father, do you know who killed that beautiful little cherry-tree yonder in the garden? This was a tough question; and George staggered under it for a moment; but quickly recovered himself: and looking at his father, with the sweet face of youth brightened with the inexpressible charm of all-conquering truth, he bravely cried out, 'I can't tell a lie, Pa; you know I can't tell a lie. I did cut it with my hatchet.'—Run to my arms, you dearest boy, cried his father in transports, run to my arms; glad am I, George, that you killed my tree; for you have paid me for it a thousand fold. Such an act of heroism in my son is more worth than a thousand trees, though blossomed with silver, and their fruits of purest gold."

There it is: with the Parson's own spelling, punctuation and italics—with his prophetic use, moreover, of that 1934 phrase "a tough question," save for which last, we contend, it is all correctly in the character and in the manner, not only of the fiction, but of the fact, of its period.

We leave you to figure out for yourselves the violent fluctuations of the golden guinea in the mental market of the elder Washington. The moment was emotional; nothing is so delicately attuned to emotion as the international exchange.

Our point is that if George's father talked like most fathers of his period, so did George reply as most fathers of any period would say they wanted their young sons to reply. The whole anecdote merely says that George Washington wasn't a liar.

And we have yet to hear somebody declare that he was.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

One Woman's Activity.

THE trouble about being a leader of men, or of women, is that sometimes a movement which is being led gets out of hand. In other words, a leader can't escape the responsibility for the consequences of his leadership. If it develops too fastly and into fields wholly unexpected at the outset it won't suffice for the leader to say "I didn't intend for it to go that far."

BARGERON

Which is all by way of saying that I'll bet Mrs. Roosevelt will rue the day when her insistence that women become active got around to influence Mrs. June Fickel, acting director of women's activties of the Democratic National committee.

* * * *

It is beyond me why Mrs. Fickel picked the particular activity she did. I can appreciate that with Mrs. Roosevelt leading a great movement to make women active that Mrs. Fickel could not resist the temptation to become active herself. And it may be supposed that when she looked around for something to be active in she found the field so crowded that it was with considerable difficulty that she found an activity left.

Of course, she could have given allegiance to some activity that was going on. But there would have been nothing individual about that. It is terribly hard to find an individual activity these days; that is to say, something new in the activity line. Years ago, when there wasn't so much activity it would have been different. Most anyone who entered into an activity then attracted attention because, comparatively speaking, there was so little activity going on.

* * * *

As I say, I don't know that this explains why Mrs. Fickel selected the particular activity she is engaged in. She certainly picked an unusual one, however, one that calls for the very best in an active person, you might say.

What Mrs. Fickel has decided to do is to teach the women of the South why they are Democrats.

She is from Utah, herself, which makes her undertaking all the more admirable to those of us who are keen for anything new in the activity line. Says Mrs. Fickel in a statement to the press:

"We have to show the Democratic women of the South the reasons why they should be Democrats. We have to educate the women so they don't vote their prejudice instead of their principles."

* * * *

It is my understanding that in line with Mrs. Fickel's pronouncement Mrs. James H. Wolfe, director of the Democratic Women's Bureau, is already in the South. It would be worth a dill pickle with a stick of peppermint candy to know what she is telling the women down there, just what reasons she is giving for their being Democrats.

It is something they, themselves, have never given any thought to, not any real serious thought. Somehow they are just Democrats, year after year, from Jackson to Roosevelt by the way of Bryan, and all the time save when Al Smith is up.

But why? Mrs. Fickel and Mrs. Wolfe have to explain that. It's never been a matter of great worry in the South. It's just a religion or a tradition or something. Their grandfathers were Democrats before them and before that their great-grandfathers and so on back.

* * * *

Year in and year out they are Democrats, they and their husbands, too. Jim Farley can count on them in 1936 just as he did in 1932.

This being the case the question arises as to just why Mrs. Fickel must bring the matter up. Admittedly it is an activity for her but it is a dangerous one.

If the people of the South ever get seriously to asking themselves why they are Democrats they might decide it is not Democrats they want to be. A pretty fix Mrs. Fickel would have put the party in then.

Crop Cut to Spur 1934 Peanut Prices

Growers Who Sign Up Also Will Get $8 Bonus.

Farm administration officials yesterday predicted that as a result of the recently announced peanut adjustment program, market prices for the 1934 crop would be above $59 a ton for Spanish peanuts, $56 for Virginias and $50 for runners, the Associated Press reported.

Producers who sign and carry out agreements to adjust their 1935 peanut acreage will receive in addition $8 a ton on their 1934 harvest. The benefit payment will not be made on peanuts "hogged down" or left in the ground.

Growers in signing contracts will agree to plant in 1935 a peanut acreage not more than 90 per cent of the 1933 planted acreage, or 90 per cent of the 1934 planted acreage, or the average acreage planted in 1933 and 1934.

9 Avenue Gambling Raid Brings Arrest of 3 Men

Three men were arrested yesterday when police raided an alleged gambling establishment in the 1700 block of Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

Those held on charges of setting up a gaming table gave names of Thomas Ryan, 37, of the 200 block of First street northwest; Joseph Castell, 42, of a downtown hotel, and Frank Pape, 40, of the 200 block of First street northwest. The raiders, led by Sergt. George Deyoe, forced entrance to the rear of a cigar store to gain entrance, it was reported.

Constitution Held Up As Filipinos Wrangle

By Vincente A. Pacis
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

Manila, P. I., Oct. 8.

TWO HUNDRED AND TWO delegates elected by popular suffrage and representing the entire archipelago, including the so-called non-Christian provinces, are now in Manila writing the Constitution of the Philippine Commonwealth and Philippine Republic.

The opening days of the convention were full of incidents. For instance, the appearance of Senate President Quezon before the convention to declare it open and to conduct the election of its temporary chairman was questioned openly on the floor, although Quezon, intuitively realizing the situation, managed to refuse recognition to his critics as long as he temporarily held the gavel.

It was stated on the floor, however, by a former Representative and director of the Bureau of Commerce and Industry, that Quezon, not being a delegate, did not have any business presiding over the opening of the convention. In reply, it was declared in behalf of the Filipino leader that the convention, having been convened by a resolution of the Legislature, pursuant to the independence law, was logically declared open by the heads of the Legislature.

Consisting of some 100 delegates loyal to the Quezon party, 60 delegates owing allegaiince to the group headed by Senator Osmena and former Speaker Roxas, and about 40 delegates without strong party affiliations, the convention might have been the scene of classic battles for supremacy. Since all its decisions must be made by two-thirds votes, no single group could have controlled it. Fortunately, the Quezon and Osmena-Roxas men, although bitter enemies, have combined to assure the smooth running of the convention.

This cooperation was so evident, especially on the opening day of the convention when the proceedings progressed with clock-like accuracy, that independent delegates openly charged "combinations" to railroad a constitution. Although, subsequently, there ensued a fight over committees, so keen that the harmony between the two biggest groups was threatened, it now appears the convention will complete its work without much lost motion.

* * * *

ELECTED president of the convention was Senator Claro M. Recto, a new recruit in the Quezon camp, a one time minority whip already known as Quezon's heir-apparent in the Senate presidency if the latter becomes chief executive in the new government. The membership of the convention is really representative. While there are respected and venerable members like Dr. Rafael Palma, former president of the University of the Philippines; Manuel Roxas, former speaker, Gens. Alejandrino and Sandiko, members of the Malolos Congress which drafted the constitution of Aguinaldo's Philippine Republic; Pedro Guevara, Camilo Osias and many other acknowledged leaders, there also are youngsters fresh from college who took advantage of the indifference of some people and ran for the convention successfully.

A degree of indifference to the convention among some persons arose because the delegates are entitled to only six pesos per diem and only when actually attending session, and also because many of the provisions to be embodied in the constitution are already well stated in the independence law Felipe Agoncillo, Aguinaldo's secretary of state, refused to run for the convention on this account. And, of course, Senate President Quezon, Senator Osmena and Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, the country's acknowledged leading statesmen, are not members of the convention.

After being in session a week the convention was able to appoint only a single committee, that on credentials. Half of its time has been given to the consideration of protests against some 10 members and the other half to debating the rules of procedure. Nevertheless, the steam roller which functioned so precisely on the opening day may again be put in opertaion if the situation demands.

* * * *

MEANWHILE, Quezon plans two things: to organize a new party that will embrace all his scattered followings, and to go to Europe and America for medical treatment and political propaganda. His original plan had been to wait for the draft of the constitution and to take it himself to Washington for the President's approval as required by the independence act. In view of his illness, however, he may have to leave before the convention is over, in which his political activities abroad will be confined to laying the ground for the political and commercial relations of the new Philippine state.

It had been predicted the convention would be in session for only three months. At the pace it has followed, so far, it may have to be at work at least six months. Meanwhile, through pressure brought to bear by delegates themselves, the legislature, also in session, has started a move to double the delegates' pay per diem.

The Fall Examination.

Dr. Roosevelt—Well, how is the patient now?

Uncle Sam—I never was more uncertain in my life.

Dr. Roosevelt—You're really in pretty fair shape, but I'm changing the treatment. Some of the medicine you've been taking hasn't done what we thought it would.

Uncle Sam—I've been trying to tell you right along that I was being overdosed.

Dr. Roosevelt—Well, anybody can make a mistake.

Uncle Sam—You're telling me!

* * * *

Dr. Roosevelt—We had to experiment a little; your case was a most unusual one.

Uncle Sam—What's become of Dr. Johnson? I haven't seen him for some time.

Dr. Roosevelt—He's been taken off your case.

Uncle Sam—I sort of liked Johnson, but he was so rough that I had to go under an anaesthetic so he could take my pulse. Well, that means one less doctor to contend with, doesn't it?

Dr. Roosevelt—Not exactly. I'm having a sort of commission take his place.

Uncle Sam—A commission! Am I back under Hoover?

* * * *

Dr. Roosevelt—We're cutting out the more drastic NRA hot baths and easing up with some of the code capsules. I guess the original prescriptions were too drastic.

Uncle Sam—I hope you've found it out in time. Personally I think all I need is rest.

Dr. Roosevelt—I'm going to see that you get that. For one thing, I've asked the employers and workers to stop playing football in the corridors while you're convalescing.

Uncle Sam—I don't mind the football so much; it's those Indian games they've been playing.

Dr. Roosevelt—Well, I'm having a quiet zone put up all around the hospital and I hope they'll respect it.

Uncle Sam—It'll be a break if they even read it.

* * * *

Dr. Roosevelt—I want you to keep a stiff upper lip and try to get a lot of strength back during the next few months.

Uncle Sam—With Congress coming back, I'll need it. Say, can't you keep Huey Long from throwing things through the ward windows? It's awfully upsetting.

Dr. Roosevelt—I doubt that anybody can stop Huey Long from throwing things, but we can reinforce the windows.

* * * *

Uncle Sam—I feel worse already. Lissen, doctor, tell me one thing to cheer me up. Is all this treatment temporary or permanent?

Dr. Roosevelt—It all depends on you!

Uncle Sam—Something tells me I'd better get better in self-defense.

Dr. Roosevelt—You're taking the words out of my mouth!

As Quillen Looks at It

Gloves Are a Poor Defense Against Brass Knucks.

By Robert Quillen.

Bill Jones was an ordinary man with ordinary faults and there was bitterness in his heart because other men seemed better.

One blue Monday he visited the town magician and said: "I'm tired of being rowdy and common. Here's ten bucks if you will change me into a gentleman."

The magician pocketed the money and made some passes and said that would be all. Bill felt no change, but he went his way satisfied.

He was late getting home. As he opened the front door he smelled cabbage and said to himself: "She knows I hate the stuff, and yet there won't be anything else."

Just then his wife saw him and began to upbraid him for being late. On previous occasions such words of reproof had led to battle. This time he opened his mouth to reply and was astonished to hear himself saying: "I'm sorry."

His wife stared at him in startled disbelief. Then she decided he was being sarcastic and began to hurl remarks that blistered. Bill thought of several cutting things to say in return, but his tongue wouldn't work. Moving in a kind of trance, he bowed his head and backed out.

At a short-order restaurant he waited for service while burly men who came in later banged on the table and got attention.

Walking back to the store he bumped into a stranger who thought his brief apology an evidence of softness and cursed him. Bill reddened and his fists closed, but he walked on without further remark. "I hate a scene," he thought.

At the store a young foreman who felt too important approached him and began to tell him how to run his business.

Bill's eyes hardened, but he thought: "I could fire him and thus ruin him, while he has no power to harm me. Being stronger obligates me to be patient. I fairly itch to show him who is boss, but something keeps me silent."

Then he thought what it was that hindered him and made tracks to the office of the magician.

"Undo it, please," he said. "Make me as I was."

"Tired of being a gentleman?" asked the magician.

"I am tired," said Bill, "of being the goat. This gentleman business is too much of a handicap in my set."

Executor of Roosevelt's thesis that workings of the Government are the public's business. Collateral descendant of Gen. Jubal A. Culbertson on Bridge

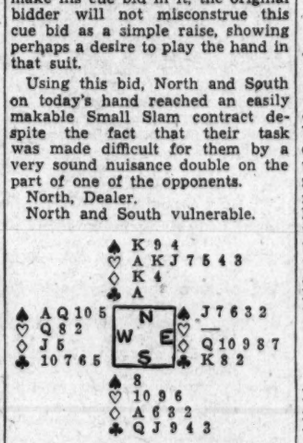
The Cue Bid in Partner's Suit.

One of the chief beauties of Contract Bridge is that new situations continually crop up and intelligent and alert players are very frequently able to invent new and interesting bids. We have all heard of the Overcall in the opponents' bid suit which shows first-round control of this suit through the possession of either Ace or of a void. It is very rarely, however, that one can cue bid in one of partner's suits. The opportunity to do this presents itself only when two definite situations exist. First, the partnership must have previously decided on some other suit. Second, there must be a double of the second suit by one of the opponents, so that when the partner of the player who has bid the second-suit decides to make his cue bid in it, the original bidder will not misconstrue this cue bid as a simple raise, showing perhaps a desire to play the hand in that suit.

Using this bid, North and South on today's hand reached an easily makable Small Slam contract despite the fact that their task was made difficult for them by a very sound nuisance double on the part of one of the opponents.

North, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

North	East	South	West
1♡	Pass	2♡(1)	Pass
4◇(2)	Dbl.(3)	Pass	Pass
4♡(4)	Pass	5◇(5)	Pass
6♡(6)	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—A prepared bid. Strictly speaking, South has not the adequate trump support needed to raise his partner's suit. However, South decides that if he bid two clubs—his only alternative—he would be definitely embarrassed by any subsequent bids his partner might make. For instance, if over two clubs North bid two notrump, South would not feel strong enough to bid three hearts, which would be an inferential force; but on the other hand he certainly did not wish to pass. Having decided that there is only one bid in the South hand (unless North starts forcing), South decides to make his bid the one which seems to give the most important information.

2—North is too strong to bid four hearts, which would automatically close the auction. Since three diamonds would be an inferential force, four diamonds must be recognized as a Slam try. The two-card minor suit is the only sound force available to North. He knows that if his partner raises diamonds he can always return to hearts.

3—A very fine nuisance double. East of course recognizes that North's force is in a fake suit. He doubles to inhibit the opponents from reaching a Slam, which he feels fairly certain they can make.

4—North has shown the strength of his hand and expressed his interest in a Slam but the four-diamond bid. He now can do no more than return to four hearts.

5—South despite his weak trump holding, has definitely a little bit more than a minimum raise to two hearts. He realizes that his partner was trying for a Slam and he further realizes that the latter probably was considerably discouraged by East's double of four diamonds—the diamond suit obviously being one of the weak spots in the North hand. South therefore decides to give his partner one more chance to contract for a Slam. He does this by making a cue bid in his partner's suit, showing control of the first round of that suit—and almost certainly in this case with the Ace. South bids five diamonds intending to pass to five hearts, as he has now shown the full strength of his hand.

6—With the practical certainty of no losers in either hearts, diamonds or clubs, North can contract for the Slam. Either the spade Queen in Dummy, a singleton spade or even a doubleton spade, if the Ace is right, will take care of the situation in that suit. There must be at at the worst an even money play for the Slam.

East chose a low spade as his opening lead against the Slam. West won with the Ace and returned a diamond, which the Declarer won with Dummy's Ace. Declarer now led a heart to his Ace and then reentered the Dummy by ruffing a low spade. The marked heart finesse was now taken and North was able to claim the rest of the tricks. Even without the spade opening, which admittedly made things easier, North could not haye lost his contract.

De Voto's Fine Novel Of Intelligent People

By Theodore Hall.

ONCE in a very long time there comes a novel which casts a light on all the others. For the most part, you know, novels stay in little, isolated worlds of their own. They treat of Chicago, or Maine, or Iowa, or Georgia, and—more to the point—they treat of people who are indigenous, rooted to the locale, largely ambitious toward anything which does not concern their immediate naturalistic present. Such novels as Mrs. Miller's "Lamb in His Bosom" and Mr. Halper's "The Foundry," notably excellent though they are, belong yet in this majority class. It is good and enduring as a type—and it is also comparatively easy to write and to read.

THEO. HALL.

Vastly more difficult, and hence far rarer, is what you might call "the intelligent novel"—a work whose characters, insofar as they are typical, mark a way of life incomparably more self-conscious than any farm or factory ought to exhibit. I can think of only a handful of examples of what I mean. Malraux's "Man's Fate" is one. Romains' "Men of Good Will" is another. So is Tess Slesinger's "The Unpossessed." Aldous Huxley's masterpiece, "Point Counter Point," is, of course, the prime landmark in the field.

In novels of this latter sort you are not so much given local color as you are introduced to a gallery of thinking people, adult and articulate. And they are thinking, not about milking the red cow or spending the night in the village, but about the prime posers most of us come to in our most philosophic (and usually bilious) moments. If the type form of self-query is "To be or not to be," then it only goes to show how little the Hamlets among us have changed amid all the touted advantages of the twentieth century.

* * * *

I've been at some pains to make clear what I would suggest by the term, "the intelligent novel," because it is from this angle that we must approach Bernard DeVoto's "We Accept With Pleasure" (Little Brown, $2.50).

Yet I do you a disservice if you gather that this book is unattractive. True, readers who fatten on the sweet superiority of watching folkways will be rather puzzled by it. But readers who want to respect the intelligence of a novel's characters, and who desire the consequent stimulation of their own minds, will enjoy "We Accept With Pleasure" as they have no other novel in recent years. Brilliantly, even beautifully, Mr. DeVoto has written the "Point Counter Point" of this side of the Atlantic.

* * * *

It is a story of the war generation ten years after. The three Gale cousins, Julian, Jonathan, and Loring, and Ted Grayson and Ric Barreda had all been at Harvard together, had all seen service. When the tale opens in the summer of 1927, Jonathan is a successful Boston lawyer, spiritually divorced from his wife, but decorously keeping up appearances—Loring loses his editorship when a liberal magazine folds up in Chicago—Ted and his wife, Libby, are struggling along on a small professional salary at Northwestern U.—Ric is waxing fat as a producer of musical comedies. And Julian, dying soon after the war, remains as a shining, gallant, and heroic figure—"he took the war and shone it on himself, drew war's dark splendid cloak about him and such embroidery in scarlet." In every mind save Ric's he stands as a legend of what their disappointed, anticlimactic lives might have become.

There are other Gales—Beatrice, 30-ish, dark, strange with some secret, and Hester, 17, as lovely a girl as a novelist has ever imagined. And there is Dr. Gage Ewing, who works with deadly germs in a laboratory and enjoys a cultivated taste in music.

To each of these characters the 16 months of the novel bring a crisis and some kind of solution. Ted comes East to the vicinity of Boston, conquers his claustrophobia (inflicted by the war), writes a musical comedy with Ric and lets the success go to his head—with the result that he cuts into his marriage at the root. Loring and Beatrice, after painful doubts, are married. Hester's love for Jonathan flowers briefly before she dies; her story, especially the death scene, is unforgetably poignant. Jonathan brings the hollow mockery of his marriage to an end. Gage, closely linked with all these lives, is deepened in his type of determined assurance. The fact, not the myth, of Julian is seen more and more clearly—nothing could be so damning as Beatrice's long inner monologue about him, very like the famous Molly Bloom pasage at the end of "Ulysses."

So complex a story is told by a variety of devices. There is a great deal of the "stream of consciousness" method, used chiefly to recall the war. Contemporary allusions come on the stage, such as the Sacco-Vanzetti frenzy and the Margery spiritualism case. The scenes, almost always dramatic and enthralling, take you from the arty set of Chicago to Beacon Hill on Christmas Eve, from a classroom at Northwestern to the lovely countryside of Webersham Valley (which may be identified as the region around the little town of more good conversation than most of us are likely to meet with in a month.

I can not help feeling that some of the writing is over-cryptic, some of the characters a bit nebulous. We do not, for instance, quite see Loring and Jonathan. Yet the story of Ted and Libby is immensely alive and moving, best noted in Mr. DeVoto's sharp-eyed regard for the small, telling point. Worlds and worlds are shown by Libby's wail to her husband, during their poor days: "I don't care. I've got to bawl. I sat here and looked at you and your poor darn pants were thin."

Pre-eminently the book records the impact of life on sensitive, articulate people. "At noon," goes the motto quotation, "he bounded out for food, and nothing less than roast lion would content him. But by suppertime milk toast would do." Thus quieted and, in a way, seasoned by their experience, the characters responded to life with the faintly wry and ironic note—"We Accept With Pleasure." It is not hearty, but it is true to their type.

For that candid revealing of the most difficult of all people to portray in fiction, we must thank Mr. DeVoto's subtle but infinitely stirring novel.

Forum Will Hear Prof. Macintosh

Prof. Douglas Clyde Macintosh, Canadian World War chaplain, whose application for naturalization was denied by the Supreme Court when he said he would never bear arms in a war he considered unjust, will be the chief speaker at the opening exercises of the Religious Liberty Forum, at the First Baptist Church on Sunday.

He will speak on "Religious Liberty and National Demands," taking up the issue of whether territorial sovereignty by a State carries with it an automatic sovereignty in matters of religion and morals, according to the church announcement.

Other speakers will be introduced at the forum every Sunday evening thereafter by the Rev. Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, minister of the church.

Dr. Macintosh is now a professor at Yale University.

French News Agency Under Fire in Madrid

Madrid, Oct. 8 (AP).—The Havas (French) News Agency filed formal protest with the French Embassy tonight after government troops, harassed by sniping rebels, raked the Havas offices with rifle fire.

A Spanish army lieutenant appeared in the door of the office after the firing, Havas' complaint charged, and threatened to kill everybody in the office, including women and children.

John Burroughs, the Poet.

We think of John Burroughs as naturalist and essayist; but he was not only a poet at heart, he wrote poetry. Every one knows his tremendous admiration for Walt Whitman; it is probable that Burroughs did more to increase the fame of Whitman and the number of his readers in America than any other man, with the possible exception of Horace Traubel. I remember John Burroughs, when he made a visit to Yale in 1899. He gave a lecture on Whitman, and read aloud from "Leave of Grass" to the students. His enthusiasm was infectious. Every one who knew Burroughs loved him. In later years he stayed at my house in New Haven, when he received the degree of Doctor of Letters from Yale. Of course he had no gown—what would a man like Burroughs do with a gown? So he honored me by wearing my gown in the procession and on the academic platform. He was a warm-hearted man with immense gusto for life, full of laughter. But the last time I saw him he was old and feeble. It was on the stage of the Brooklyn Academy of Music in 1919, where public exercises were held in honor of the centennial of Whitman's birth. When I finished speaking, Burroughs took my hand, while the tears ran freely down his dear old face. He was 82 years old.

George W. Lyon, of Pittsburgh, calls my attention to the following poem by Burroughs. He says it is good for fretful Americans, especially in these times. It is dominated by the calm, placid spirit of its author; by the inner tranquility of his soul. Mr. Lyon adds, "Every American business man or banker who is inclined to tear his hair when stocks drop five points, should have a copy of this poem in a frame on his desk. The writer's father used to attend school with John Burroughs and Jay Gould in the little district school in Roxbury, N. Y.:"

Waiting.

Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, nor tide, nor sea;
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For, lo! my own shall come to me.

I stay my haste, I make delays—
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways
And what is mine shall know my face.

Asleep, awake, by night or day,
The friends I seek are seeking me,
No wind can drive my bark astray
Nor change the tide of destiny.

What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap where it has sown,
And garner up its fruit of tears.

The waters know their own, and draw
The brook that springs in yonder height;
So flows the good with equal law
Unto the soul of pure delight.

The stars come nightly to the sky;
The tidal wave unto the sea;
Nor time, nor space, nor deep, nor high,
Can keep my own away from me.

Two Noted Figures in the Theater Discuss the State of Drama and the Dance

Marc Connelly Here to Stage A New Comedy

Reopens National Tonight; Fokine Is Tea Guest; About Showshops.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

Marc Connelly returns to the theater after an absence of almost five years—five years devoted to complacent contemplation of the country wide triumph of "The Green Pastures," his simple, devout and moving revelation of the Old Testament Scriptures as seen through the eyes of the primitive Negro—with a clear vision of the theater's present plight, if any, and its current needs.

MARC CONNELLY.

The "present plight," one gathers, Mr. Connelly deems largely nonexistent. Its current needs reduce themselves practically to the single item of a demand for good plays—not theatrical properties that can be turned out and dumped on "the road" in quadruplet carbon copies of a fair Broadway original, but single, conscientious efforts that have something to contribute to the enhancement of the literature of the stage.

Here to Open Season.

This discussion all came about, by the way, in the dim recesses of the National Theater last evening when Mr. Connelly was setting the lights for the first act, preliminary to a rehearsal of "The Farmer Takes a Wife," the new play which he wrote with Frank B. Elser and Max Gordon is producing to open the season of legitimate drama in Washington tonight, when it will be presented for the first time on any stage. We had been talking about "The Farmer Takes a Wife" for some time and finally got around to the inescapable topic of "the road."

"Back in the premovie days, the legitimate theater's competition lay in the so-called varieties, circuses, carnival companies and whatnot, representing the amusement world's mediocrities," said Mr. Connelly. "These now have been supplanted in large measure over the country by one aspect or another of the motion picture industry which has pretty thoroughly captured public attention as a source of mass entertainment. I would not say that the competition is very much keener now than it was under the old order. But its identity has been changed. 'The road' is still out there for works of the theater that deserve its support, but I doubt if the old days of an unbroken road season of 40 weeks for any old thing an unscrupulous manager might care to send on tour ever will return. I hope they don't.

Facilities are Restricted.

"In a great many places over the United States facilities for presenting legitimate plays are denied the living theater because they have been cornered, so to speak, by the picture interests. But the picture people are not averse to securing successful plays for later filming. That frequently has the effect of opening up territory supposedly closed to the touring attraction. It has happened in the case of 'The Green Pastures,' although there have been few communities the 'Pastures' has not been permitted to enter. This elimination of the flood of bad theater that used to sweep over the country every season, I think, is a salutary thing. When the new condition is finally grasped by producers and their activities are adjusted to it, the traditional theater will be sounder and stronger than ever."

"Beyond this present play, have you anything in mind that you plan to write for the theater?" was asked.

"Yes, I am doing a play for next year that has scarcely taken form in my own mind as yet. There remains a terrific amount of research to be done upon it, but I can tell you now that it will take the form of a fantasy, partly Colonial and partly modern, pertaining to American life.

Finds Americana Productive.

"I find myself increasingly fascinated by Americana as a source of effective drama. The surface of that field of creative effort has hardly been scratched, to invent a phrase. This play we are staging here is a fragment of life during one of the most picturesque periods in America's development and a period that is very little known by reason of any earlier exposition in the theater."

This brings us around, finally, to where the conversation really started.

"The undercurrent of thought and action in 'The Farmer Takes a Wife,'" Mr. Connelly continued, "is absolutely authentic. Mr. Elser, who had the original idea of dramatizing Walter D. Edmonds' novel of 'Rome Haul,' Donald Oenslager, the scenic designer, and I toured the actual locale of the story last spring and unearthed some unbelievably quaint data on the period with which the play deals. Of course, you know it is a story of the days when the Erie Canal was at the peak of its importance as a connecting link between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic seaboard.

Back to Washington's Day.

"To go back a little, the project of building some such waterway as the Erie Canal was alive as long ago as Washington's time. He considered it favorably, but without tangible result. It was not until 1819 that DeWitt Clinton finally put the idea into practical operation by beginning construction work at Rome, a town about midway of the canal's final route in New York State, and carrying it from there in both directions. That is where Mr. Arnold got the title 'Rome Haul' for his novel. By dint of some miracle of the times, Clinton succeeded in completing the canal in six years, opening it for traffic in 1825 at a cost of something like $100,000,000. We pick up the history of the old waterway at the height of its career in 1853, when railroads were just beginning to threaten its supremacy as a quick route for both passengers and freight between the Middle West and the East. Vanderbilt was just then assembling five small rail lines into what was to become the New York Central system.

"All this background is as true to historical fact and as authentic in detail as we can make it. That wall paper up there on that first-act set is an exact reproduction, for example, of a design on an old lock-keeper's cabin, which we found about four layers down on walls that obviously never had been scraped.

"'The Farmer Takes a Wife,' although unfolded against this panorama of an early Americanism, is a light comedy, bordering at times on the farcical. It is a feathery trifle that attempts to preserve a quality of antiquarian realism, which Mr. Arnold caught admirably in his book, by faithful reproduction of all the quaint trivia of its day."

Max Gordon's Big Season.

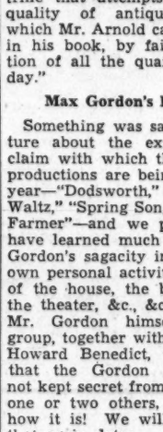
Something was said at this juncture about the extraordinary acclaim with which the Max Gordon productions are being received this year—"Dodsworth," "The Great Waltz," "Spring Song" and now "The Farmer"—and we probably should have learned much concerning Mr. Gordon's sagacity in restricting his own personal activities to the front of the house, the business side of the theater, &c., &c., but just then Mr. Gordon himself joined the group, together with Mr. Oenslager, Howard Benedict, who sees to it that the Gordon enterprises are not kept secret from the public, and one or two others, and you know how it is! We will get around to that again, later.

In the meantime, this column's confidence that the mere fact of Mr. Gordon's producing the play and Mr. Connelly's directing it, in addition to having had a large part in its writing, insures the worthiness of its content and the expertness of its craftsmanship, has been materially strengthened.

In fact, I am so intrigued by the preparation of the new play for public scrutiny tonight that as soon as I have set down a word or two about Michel Fokine, who also was visible to the inquiring eye yesterday, I am going back to the National and watch whatever is left of the rehearsal, against the time when I shall see you down front tonight.

A Master of the Dance.

Michel Fokine, a kindly, affable, gray little man, with a prodigious sense of what is artistic in the dance, is the master of terpsichorean classicism who is presenting his corps de ballet for the first time in Washington on the stage of Loew's Fox Theater this week, in three of his own creations—a choreographic interpretation of Ravel's "Bolero;" "Les Sylphides," danced to music by Chopin, and "Prince Igor," to music by Borodin.



MICHEL FOKINE.

These three creations, diversified and contrasting as they are, one gathers, do not represent a major achievement on the part of Fokine. In the course of a casual conversation—this would be at tea in the convenient quarters of the Variety Club in the Hotel Willard yesterday afternoon, with Division Manager Carter Barron and Mrs. Barron as hosts—he lets drop the information that he has created something in the neighborhood of 70 ballets during his career in the theater.

The "Bolero" number on view at the Fox, was conceived, costumed and staged in the brief period of six days. Under stress of unusual circumstances, he has perfected works of comparable length and importance in considerably less time than that.

Collaborate in Work.

A native, together with the charming Mme. Fokine, who accompanies him, of Petrograd, Russia, Michel Fokine has been resident in America 15 years and, like Mme. Fokine, speaks English fluently. Mme. Fokine, incidentally, is a premiere danseuse of the first rank, having appeared numerously with Fokine under the familiar stage name of Vera Fokina. Now she appears professionally only on occasions of more than ordinary importance, but is her husband's constant associate and consultant in his creative work. It was she who designed the "Bolero" costumes.

Both are emphatic in their belief that the American public does not lag behind that of any European nation in its appreciation of genuine artistry. So convinced are they that classicism in dance, as well as in music, art and literature, is not anathema to the mass of American amusement seekers that they are planning an entire summer of ballets in the Lewissohn Stadium in New York next summer.

Fokine also now has under consideration a proposition to stage ballets for three large interests in New York, including the Capitol Theater on Broadway.

Teaches Fixed Routine.

There is no guess-work or extemporizing in the execution of a Fokine ballet. He creates the dances precisely as he wants them performed and the artist, whether solo or merely a member of the supporting ensemble, is not permitted to vary his performance even slightly.

In other words, Fokine teaches his dancers a rigid and inflexible routine and does not trust to an inspirational performance, prompted by the particular nuances given the music on the specific occasion or the state of the dancer's digestion or temperament at the moment.

Only in rare instances, as in certain passages of the "Prince Igor" ballet, for example, is any latitude given the individual performer. Then the members of the ensemble are permitted to "ad lib" action to bring about an effect of spontaneous and unrehearsed frenzy.

Neither does Fokine consider his responsibility for the success of a ballet discharged with the completion of its first performance. He watches every member from backstage, and after each performance calls his company together and corrects errors, offers new suggestions or applauds commendable effort. Not insensible to the value of suggestion of others, he frequently incorporates in his work "bits" that have been devised by the individual members of his corps. He is quick to perceive ability and the first to reward it by adequate recognition.

Both Fokine and Mme. Fokine are profuse in their admiration of the National Capital, a sentiment which the National Capital, by reason of the worth of their creative artistry, personal charm and gracious kindliness, finds it a pleasant privilege to reciprocate.

Dots and Dashes.

Fulfilling a hope, and a doubtful forecast published here as long ago as the middle of September, the Warner Brothers' local executives now make official announcement that Maxine Doyle, former mistress of ceremonies at the Earle, will headline the stage bill at that house the week of October 19 . . . The screen feature will be "Six Day Bike Rider," in which she plays the lead opposite Joe E. Brown . . . Her first expectation, confided to this department, was to be here for the current week of October 5 . . . But the release date of the Brown bike flicker was set back, and so . . . The week of the nineteenth, by the way, will be celebrated as an "anniversary week" at the Earle . . . More of this later . . . The Children's Theater of New York will present its season of six plays in the National Theater again this year . . . One play a month on Saturday mornings, with professional adult actors comprising the casts . . . More of this later, also . . . That vibraharp played by Don Bestor at the Earle was invented by a Chicago man named Musser and is an instrument of more complexity than meets the eye . . . It took Don three months to master its intricacies, what with its electrical control and one thing and another . . . He has exclusive rights to the instrument for a year . . . Joy Lynne, singing with the Bestor band, is a native of Columbus, Ohio . . . Pete Macias has two attractions at his Heigh-Ho Club, accorded a supergala reopening last Friday night, that would grace any theatrical bill . . . Maurice, a marvelous prestidigitator, and Enters and Borgia, a dance team that will prove a sensation in Washington, just as it did out at the Black Hawk in Chicago . . . And then there's Marty Rubin and his "Miss Otis Regrets" . . . With some private verses that will knock your ears back!

Morning After Note.

Oh, so you're a Cardinal?

They Meet for the First Time

Though she had acted Elizabeth Barrett in his play, "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," nearly 700 times in America, Katharine Cornell had never met Rudolf Besier until recently when he went to Geneva, Switzerland, to see her on her way to Bavaria, where she is spending part of her holiday from the theater. A long and serious illness prevented the author from coming to America to see the actress in his drama, which has since been so skillfully translated to the cinema. Author and star are pictured on the balcony of Miss Cornell's hotel in Geneva.

Musicians Hear Orrin Suthern

Colored Organist Plays at Metropolitan Baptist Church.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

An evening with the Musicians Guild last night was the occasion of the presentation of Orrin Suthern, young colored organist, of Chicago, in the auditorium of the Metropolitan Baptist Church, as the first in a series for the purpose of improving music in colored churches, and arousing interest of colored children in study of musical classics.

Camille Nickerson, of Howard University, guild president, explained to an appreciative audience the intention of her organization to raise standards of work among colored musicians, an effort now being made on a National scale by the National Association of Negro Musicians, of which the guild is a branch.

Mr. Suthern's program included "Aria" (Handel), "Toccata and Fugue in D Minor," "Minuet," and Choral Prelude—"My Heart Cries Out to Thee" (Bach), "Allegro, from First Symphony" (Macquaire), "Communion" (Torres), "Cantaline Pastorale" (Guilmant), "Finale from First Symphony" (Vierne).

A vocal solo, "Seek Ye First the Kingdom of God" (Fisher), was rendered by R. Todd Duncan, barytone, of the Howard University School of Music.

Walter Connolly Is Choice for Philosopher-Sleuth; Helen Hayes' New Picture Previewed in West; News Notes Fresh From Hollywood.

By Philip K. Scheuer

(Pinch-Hitting for Edwin A. Schallert).

Hollywood, Oct. 7.—A current filmdom quirk is difficulty producers experience in casting mystery and detective stories. Much to-do was made finding a thin man for "The Thin Man," and lately the village has been agog in a polite way over who would play Father Brown in Paramount's collected series of G. K. Chesterton stories about the gently philosophizing sleuth.

HELEN HAYES.

Walter Connolly, it is now learned, will be "Father Brown, Detective." Thus eliminating such runners-up as the Rev. Henry Scott Rubel (otherwise Hal Raynor, gag man for Joe Penner and duck) who has gone back to his flock, and Sir Guy Standing, who is too busy living one of the lives of a Bengal lancer to be bothered with such effete doings.

Connolly's performance in "Whom the Gods Destroy" had critics doing nip-ups and calling him "another Emil Jannings," but all this apparently was forgotten when Connolly went into Max Reinhardt's "Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Hollywood Bowl and proved himself a sportive zany of the first order as Bottom. He is currently in the North, still capering as Bottom in the same spectacle.

Comedian or tragedian, he goes to Paramount on loan from Columbia to start work as a detective, with Gertrude Michael and Paul Lukas in Father Brown's entourage.

Plague of Prague Caught in Webb.

Unless our eyes deceive us, this vampire flapping out of the Czechoslovakian darkness is none other than the "estranged" Mrs. Rudy Vallee, or Fay Webb. Rumors that the most undivorced wife in the show world will get the title role in "Vampire of Prague" are all over the place, so there is nothing to do but print them.

Miss Webb has never done any acting to speak of. She used to sit around the M-G-M lot, waiting. The dead-white, ghostly street make-up she has affected around town leads to the suspicion that Tod Browning and Guy Endore, authors, took one look at her and decided she is just the vampire they want—as is.

Browning, an old hand at spooks, will direct, and Lionel Barrymore fills a major role.

Dance Formula Beginning With "C."

If you aspire to write a successful dance for the films, name it something beginning with a capital "C." This seems to be as simple a formula as anything that comes to mind at the moment.

Radio started it with the Carioca in "Flying Down to Rio." Then repeated with the Continental in "The Gay Divorces." M-G-M has the Carlo, to be unfolded in "Student Tour." Nacio Herb Brown wrote the music and Veloz and Yolanda, who interpret it, are said to be so enthusiastic that they want to "buy" it from the studio for future use.

Illness Dogs Fox.

The strange eye infection that removed Richard Arlen from "Helldorado" to a hospital, thus halting production, has produced an aftermath on the Fox lot. Director James Cruze suffered a similar, but milder, attack of the same; Victor McLaglen is down with laryngitis and out of "East River;" James Dunn got a sore throat and halted work on "Bright Eyes" and Warner Oland had his tonsils out in Santa Barbara.

Film Pageant In Review.

Chaplin is calling his new movie "Picture No. 5." (What were the other four?) Willy Pogany is designing the sets.

Ann Dvorak, who will impersonate a hoofer in "Sweet Music," the Rudy Vallee musical, is taking lessons from Johnny Boyle.

DeWitt Jennings will resume his old role of sheriff in "The Wicked Woman," with Mady Christians and Charles Bickford.

"What Every Woman Knows" As Seen in Preview.

Flavored with shrewd homilies, acted to the queen's taste and certainly no more tedious than any classic has the right to be, Sir James Barrie's "shot" of scotch, "What Every Woman Knows," was previewed in Glendale last night. Helen Hayes, whose screen performances are now something of an annual occasion, repeats her sensitive and self-sacrificial portrayal of Maggie Shand, in which some years ago she first established an undisputed standing as one of the significant interpreters of our time in the theater.

Furthermore, she relegates herself to the background and allows a fellow player, Brian Aherne, of England, as John Shand, to ingratiate himself into one of the surest triumphs of the year.

"What Every Woman Knows" was first staged in 1908. To an exceptional degree, its film adapters have retained the Barrie spirit and augmented it with a feeling for what present-day audiences will accept.

Beginning slowly, remotely, the picture gradually makes its subtleties tell. Except for abrupt gaps which set off one "act" from another, and for a last reel from which certain key scenes seem to have been omitted, the wistful love story moves sometimes gently, sometimes sharply, to its conclusion.

Delightful, pinch-penny comedy is interpolated by the three Wylie men, played by David Torrence, Dudley Digges and Donald Crisp. Madge Evans is a well suited Lady Sybil and Lucile Watson is the countess.

Frankly an all-talkie, it is Barrie all-talkie and it will be one of those point-with-pride efforts which the film industry contrives every now and then.

There is apparently general recognition among the majority of members of Congress and aspirants that recovery can not be achieved through attacks on Government workers.

Reports of bills to be introduced in the coming session include restoration of leave, extension of the merit system and a 30-hour week.

Reconsideration of the McKellar rider to the emergency appropriation act, whereby 1,800 Treasury employes are to be dismissed, also will doubtlessly be among the first business before the House and Senate.

Mr. Morrison served as one of the judges of entries in the second annual rose show, which has just closed at the new National Museum, under auspices of the Potomac Rose Society.

SECRETARY WALLACE is commended by employes in AAA, members of Lodge 116, American Federation of Government Employes, "for being the first Cabinet member in the New Deal to protect the employes of his department by directing their attention to the law governing the vicious practice of soliciting them for political contributions."

Other resolutions were adopted at the lodge's recent meeting, extending the inquiry to see if the large number of people now on temporary appointment might not be hastened onto indefinite appointment so that they could accumulate leave, thereby giving them at least a small margin of resources if circumstances should compel a shift in plans here, necessitating their being dropped.

Another resolution called upon the grievance committee to invite the presentation of cases of individuals employed at one grade who are actually doing the work of superior grades while receiving pay at the lower grade. The committee will take the matter up with section chiefs and personnel officers.

SWEET VENTILATION

(In a Government Office)

"There's too much draft coming in there!"
"It can't be helped, we must have air!"
And air galore some do want, while others just don't!
By gum! They all do want just what they want!
But heck! Try wipe out such tribulation?
Sweet ventilation, sweet ventilation!
What saving of aches and heart palpitation,
And tongue biting from racking aggravation!
If only you could arrange all to please,
By furnishing each his share of air and breeze?
More harmony would be your compensation.
Sweet ventilation, sweet ventilation!

Cheered by Vote, Doumergue Will Ask More Power

Paris, Oct. 8 (AP).—Heartened by the results of yesterday's Cantonal elections, Premier Gaston Doumergue today determined to force Parliament to amend France's constitution as soon as it convenes early in November.

The elections, first of two successive Sunday ballots, brought victory to the rightists and to the national union government. Leftists lost six seats in the general councils of the various departments.

This the premier took to mean confidence in the government.

Doumergue charges that the existing system lets Parliament throw governments out of office before they can get started and permits each deputy to introduce all the "pork barrel" legislation he wants without providing the money to pay the bills.

He wants something like the British system for France—real authority for the premier, power to dissolve Parliament and call new elections if he is defeated in the chamber, limitation of the government of the right to originate money bills and restrictions on political activities of the civil service.

"HOT SHOTS." Independent Burlesque Association production in two acts, with Billy Foster and Leonard Kramer, John Barry, Lew Lewis, Harry Allen, the Grey Brothers, Billie Diamond, Cecil von Dell, Patsy Ginger Johnson and Evelyn Brooks. Staged under the direction of Frank Bryant. Reviewed Sunday matinee by W. A. Whitney.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

Any show following last week's splendiferous presentation might be expected to suffer by comparison. Therefore, it is greatly to the credit of the present company that there is practically no let-down in the high quality of burlesque excellence of "Hot Shots" below the performance of the late departed "Frolics" or any of the earlier shows.

The current attraction is headed by that team of zanies from which anything might emanate, and generally does—Foster and Kramer. Billy Foster is by himself a comic of high caliber. Likewise, Leonard Kramer can find his way about the stage alone.

Heading the distaff side of the company is Billie Diamond, one of the few prima-donna specialty artistes on the Independent's roster. While Miss Diamond's single burlesque specialty dazzles under the vari-colored spotlight, it is her powerful soprano that is the bigger hit.

In the blonde ebullience of Patsy Johnson yesterday's patrons recognized a queen of vim, vigor and engaging personality whose next appearance will be anticipated with pleasure. Mayhap the next time, more than a single specialty will be hers. She deserves it, and the customers would hail it.

Assisting in the comedy work for the week are John "I'll-Kill-'Em" Barry and Lew Lewis, a funny "Dutch" comic. With them Harry Allen, also a tenor of ability, appears as the straight. Ceil Von Dell has a well-received specialty number and, with Evelyn Brooks, handles the feminine straight parts. The Grey Brothers add very acceptable moments of tap dancing.

The ensemble numbers are consistently well played and colorful.

Louis Bleriot Shows Aviation Films Friday

Capital Alliance Francaise Issues Invitations to Notables.

The Alliance Francaise, of Washington, is issuing invitations to a distinguished group of Capital society for a showing of films by Mr. Louis Bleriot, French delegate to the congress of the Federation Aeronautique Internationale, on Friday afternoon at 4:45 o'clock in the ballroom of the Carlton Hotel.

The Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye will be among the guests when Mr. Bleriot shows pictures of the early days in aviation, including of his flight across the English Channel in the early part of the century. When Mr. Bleriot made this flight, he performed a feat almost as momentous as Col Lindbergh's flight of the Atlantic Ocean, for in those days planes were new and untried.

The ambassador has requested the showing of the films, which Mr. Bleriot does not often exhibit because of the age and fragility of the reels.

Mr. Bleriot, with Mme. Bleriot, has been in Washington since last Saturday to attend the meetings of the F. A. I., which opens today at the Chamber of Commerce Building.

Mrs. James Carroll Frazer is president of the Alliance Francaise in Washington.

Pillar to Post

DEBUTANTES or hobos, Mrs. Marie Moore Forrest does not discriminate when they are pigments for her gigantic canvases. But the "hobos" Mrs. Forrest is using in the pageant "Self Help" that will be presented tonight on the steps of the Capitol are not the untutored vagrants of former years. There are 500 "hobos" with college degrees at the Transient Relief, from which she is drawing talent. And a number of them are poets who have made a large scrapbook of their effusions and presented it to her as a token of their esteem.

• • • •

The most listless Lillian from the social register and the wearist Willie from the relief roll are galvanized into action by Mrs. Forrest's dynamic personality and rehearse until they are ready to drop. Cold, fatigue, even rain can't stop them. There was that final rehearsal of "Cross Triumphant" at the Sylvan Theater a few years ago, when it started to rain.

• • • •

"We can put on a good show tomorrow night," shouted Mrs. Forrest, "or we can quit now on account of the rain and it will be rotten; which shall it be?"

So they went on rehearsing in a heavy downpour, and there is a memory picture of Commander Jewell hopskipping to keep up with the pageant director trying to hold an umbrella over her head as she strode about issuing orders to her dripping-wet cohorts.

AS A RESULT of this driving force Mrs. Forrest has given some magnificent pageants in Washington, eliciting the active cooperation of society leaders such as Mrs. James Carroll Frazer and the late Mrs. Minnegerode Andrews, some of them taking parts themselves. Mrs. Cary Grayson took the leading role in "Pocahontas" and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson sponsored "Cross Triumphant."

• • • •

The wife of Admiral William Leigh has always been a devoted worker for the success of the pageants, and the Junior League, especially young Mrs. Eliphalet Andrews, has donated a lot of time an effort. Mary Louise Johnson of the Junior League has got writers' cramp helping "Self Help" by addressing invitations to diplomatic, official and resident society to attend this evening.

• • • •

Mrs. Forrest has a faculty of subduing even inanimate objects to her artistic will, and there is another memory picture of the majestic Capitol submitting tamely to flood lights of baby blue and pink. Down the vista of the years, many colorful and inspiring epics stand out, beginning with "Welcome to Belgia" celebrating the visit of King Albert and his queen shortly after the war; "Darkness and Light," the "Great American," "Wakefield."

THE F. F. V.'s witnessing tonight's pageant "Self Help" might be shocked by the episode depicting the marriage barter in colonial Virginia. For 120 pounds of tobacco a man could obtain a wife from England, and in the year 1619 over 60 fine looking barmaids were sent here to marry the colonists. These early colonists did not really buy their wives, but the 120 pounds of tobacco had to be paid to cover the cost of transportation and Gov. Yardley saw to it that no man got a wife who did not pay it. They were strict in those days, and a man was sent to the pillory merely for kissing one of the pretty barmaids without her consent.

• • • •

Forest Hills, Long Island, is synonymous with good tennis, and so is Forest Hills, D. C., since the Leon Hendersons came here to live. The young and pretty Mrs. Henderson is an expert in putting over love games in tennis. When the Director of Research and Planning and his wife found the house in the Northwest suburb bordering on Rock Creek Park, they rented it without knowing that there was a tennis court that could be resurrected in the backyard. This was a windfall to Mrs. Henderson, who can play tennis and run the house simultaneously now.

Capital Fetes Honor Prince And Princess

Bibescos Are Entertained by Envoys; Here for Air Congress.

Everybody is interested in Princess Marthe Bibesco, who is visiting in the Capital while her husband, Prince Georges Valentine Bibesco, attends the congress of the Federation Aeronautique Internationale, of which he is president. This evening the Minister of Rumania, Mr. Charles A. Davila, will entertain at a dinner followed by a large reception in honor of Prince and Princess Bibesco, and last evening the Ambassador of Great Britain, Sir Ronald Lindsay, entertained at a dinner in their honor, and also for the British delegate to the conference, Maj. C. J. W. Darwin.

Women who have read the writings of Princess Marthe are interested, as women always are, in what this glamorous Rumanian is wearing, for she has been named one of the best dressed women in Europe. For her American trip the princess selected from the collection of Chanel two models of great simplicity and chic. For street wear she has chosen an ensemble of rough navy blue wool, a two-piece belted suit with a cravat scarf of white Fayetta faille, and an accompanying three-quarter length matching coat.

Influenced, perhaps, by the fact that the chief purpose of her visit in this country is the air congress over which her husband will preside, the evening model of white Fayella chosen by Princess Marthe has a distinct suggestion of wings in the huge front bow and in the bow at the back of the gown. Formaility is given to this gown by two side panels prolonged into a train.

The importance which a really handsome jewel can add to a costume is shown by the princess who wears with this white gown an ornament of emeralds and diamonds defining the decolletage of the gown. This jewel, from the magnificent collection of rare pieces owned by the princess, has a romantic history. It was presented by Napoleon I to the Countess Colonna Walewska, of Poland.

Woodrings Back From Meeting

Attended the Opening of Surgeons' Sessions.

The Assistant Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring returned to their home in Maryland late yesterday evening by plane from Carlisle Barracks, Pa., where they went to attend the opening of the meetings of the Association of Military Surgeons, when Mr. Woodring made an address.

The Assistant Surgeon General of the United States Army, Brig. Gen. Matthew Dulaney, commanding officer at Carlisle Barracks, will preside this evening at the banquet given for those attending the meeting. Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, deputy chief of staff, and Maj. Gen. Edward Croft, chief of infantry, will be among those at the banquet from Washington, the latter being the principal speaker.

Mrs. J. N. Derling, of Des Moines, Iowa, is in the Capital for an indefinite stay, and is at the Mayflower, where her husband has maintained an apartment since his appointment as chief of the Bureau of Biological Survey.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

Gracious, it's hard enough to figure out what to wear on just so-so days, but now we have to cudgel our wits in order to produce, not just one breath-taking costume, but two of the things—one for the Tacky Ball, where we are supposed to represent our favorite stars, and one for the Hallowe'en Ball.

Yesterday afternoon, just for the fun of it, several of us girls sat ourselves down and tried to "match faces" and see how many "Hollywooders" we could find among our friends here.

Margaret McMullen could do well by Kay Francis; Betty Cremen is Washington's own Janet Gaynor; Mary Fechet (who divides her time between Baltimore and D. C.) is Karen Morley; Louise Waller is small and possesses many gestures a la Swanson; Mary Katherine Spinks was rather hard to classify, as she talks like Una Merkle, but resembles a combination of Fay Ray and Mary Brian; Bette Hartz is Joan Bennett, and Betsy Simpson could be mistaken for Ruby Keeler.

The young gentlemen were a little more difficult to place; as a result only three were "matched." John Cremen might be Nils Asther, Charles McDaniels is quite like Ralph Bellamy and Louis Tarbet does resemble Tom Mix (providing the latter was minus a score of years and a hoss).

Y. W. to Entertain For Mrs. Coolidge

Dinner Will Be Given in New York October 30.

The Young Women's Christian Association will entertain at a dinner and dramatic symphony in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York in honor of Mrs. Calvin Coolidge October 30.

Mrs. Jonathan Bailey is chairman of the committee on arrangements and Mrs. William Henry Hayes, president of the New York Y. W. C. A., will receive with Mrs. Coolidge preceding dinner.

The masque was created and the lines were written by Miss Marie Whiffen, director of activities of the Y. W. C. A., and Miss Eleanor Weddell Roberts wrote the music. The dances are under the direction of Mr. John Bovington.

Many of those on the committee assisting Mrs. Bailey are well known in Capital circles, including Mrs. Dwight Whitney Morrow, widow of Senator Morrow, of New Jersey, and former United States Ambassador to Mexico; Mrs. Walter Ewing Hope, wife of the former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and Mrs. Henry P. Davison, widow of the war-time director of the American Red Cross.

British Attache Calls on Dern And MacArthur

Home on Massachusetts Avenue Is Leased by Col. and Mrs. Torr.

The newly appointed Military Attache of the British Embassy, Lieut. Col. W. W. T. Torr, who recently arrived in Washington with Mrs. Torr, was presented yesterday to the Secretary of War, Mr. George H. Dern, and the Chief of Staff, Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Col. and Mrs. Torr are stopping at the Shoreham until the house they have leased at 2374 Massachusetts avenue is ready for occupancy.

The retiring Military Attache, Col. Maurice Fitzmaurice Day, will sail from New York Friday aboard the Scythia for England, where he will join Mrs. Day, who has been spending several months in the British Isles. They will return to Washington on leave early in November and will spend Christmas and New Year's Day with Mrs. Day's mother, Mrs. James Dudley Morgan, at her home, Dudlea, in Chevy Chase. After the New Year, Col. and Mrs. Day will return to England, where the former will report to the war office for a new station.

It is with great regret that Capital society bids farewell to Col. Day, for he and his attractive American wife have been popular figures in Washington for several years. However, they plan to return to Washington frequently to renew their friendships and visit with Mrs. Day's mother.

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Holt, of Falls City, Nebr., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Nellie Lee Holt, to Mr. Curtis Bok, son of the late Mr. Edward Bok, author and philanthropist, of Philadelphia, according to an Associated Press dispatch.

Beautiful Complexions of Siamese Women Impress American School Teacher

Miss Cunniff, Capital Visitor, Taught in Bangkok 4 Years

Secret of Smooth Skin Traced to Saffron Powder; Flexible Fingers Developed to Achieve Grace in Dancing.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

A COUNTRY whose women have fingers that bend backward as well as forward, amazingly beautiful complexions, silk clothes for every-day wear, equal rights with men, great opportunities in the professions, and a chance to marry into royalty—that is Siam as an American school teacher found it.

It was those smooth, lovely skins that first impressed Miss Hilda Cunniff, for four years a member of the faculty of a girls' school in Bangkok, the capital of Siam. She is now in Washington for a three-week stay.

"Every Siamese woman, whether she's a peasant or a princess, has a perfectly beautiful skin. I've never seen anything like those complexions," Miss Cunniff declared yesterday.

The American school teacher hadn't been long in Bangkok before she made up her mind to get to the bottom of this beauty business. She found the ritual surprisingly simple. No expensive creams, no elaborate facials, no visits to beauty shops.

Three or Four Baths a Day.

"The women bathe three and four times a day and after every bath they cover themselves with saffron powder. That's all," said the American who learned to write and speak Siamese and to wear native dress while living in Bangkok. She conceded that the powder had a tendency to make one look bilious just after it is applied.

"But the yellow stuff soon wears off, leaving an exquisitely smooth skin beneath," she explained. "I don't know how it would work with American women. Siamese skins are naturally a light golden brown. The women try to stay as light as possible. Whenever they go out in the sun they carry brightly colored umbrellas. Often they cover their faces with heavy veils."

The long, flexible fingers are achieved at greater pains, Miss Cunniff learned. Almost from birth the fingers of every child are bent backward daily as far as they will go. This is continued all through childhood by nurses and mothers. Eventually the fingers become like rubber.

"I've seen girls—and boys, too—who could actually bend back their fingers until they touched their wrists," Miss Cunniff said. "Siam's form of dancing, which consists mostly of graceful movements with the hands, is responsible for these extraordinarily flexible fingers. But even boys and girls who do not intend to become dancers go through the finger-bending exercises."

Until recently the main object in life of Siamese girls was matrimony. Now they are becoming interested in careers. Both law and medicine offer them great opportunities, according to Miss Cunniff. She observed that the few women doctors in the country have huge practices. Women have long been the managers of shops in Bangkok and other cities.

Have Equal Rights.

"In fact the women enjoy equal rights in every way. Although polygamy is still fairly prevalent, each wife has her own home, has the right to her own property in her own name, to sue for divorce, and to have as much say as her husband in the rearing of their children," Miss Cunniff said.

"Monogamy is gaining every day," she continued. "Times have been hard there, too, and the men learned it was pretty expensive keeping a whole flock of women. So one wife is considered a desirable number now.

"No matter how affluent she or her husband may be, the Siamese woman never outgrows her kitchen. She loves to spend leisure hours there, concocting new dishes.

"One princess had every cook book published. She was especially fond of American recipes. For tea she used to give her guests waffles with maple sirup and then chocolate layer cake. After that repast the guests would stagger home, and I'm almost certain they didn't eat any dinner," Miss Cunniff smiled.

The girls marry in Siam at about the same age they do in this country, the American learned. And a prince may marry a commoner but his bride wins no title through the alliance. She is a "Mrs." like anybody else.

Color has an important place in the life of a Siamese. For many years everybody wore a certain color on a certain day of the week. For instance, all Siam was decked out in blue on Monday, in red on Tuesday, and so on. This custom is only half-heartedly observed now.

Women Like to Sew.

"The women make their own clothes," Miss Cunniff explained. "They love to sew and their costumes are simple. First they don a chemise, then a "passin" or skirt, and then a sleeveless blouse. The skirt is made of handmade silk in some bright shade and is fastened around the waist with a silver belt. Voille is usually used for the blouse. With its crochet trimming it looks for all the world like an old-fashioned corset cover. But this costume is extremely becoming to the Siamese women, with their slender little figures."

The majority of the girls wear their straight black hair in a Dutch bob. Those who are attached to the palace let their hair grow long because the king is opposed to short hair for women.

The heads of children are shaved, leaving only a small topknot. When the boys and girls reach the age of 12 or thereabouts this topknot is removed by a Bhuddist priest in the course of an elaborate three-day ceremony.

"Children have a good time in Siam," Miss Cunniff said. "I've heard it called a children's paradise and the name is certainly appropriate. Mothers and fathers shower them with loving care. I suppose they're a bit pampered."

Siam is a woman's paradise, too, in the opinion of the American school teacher. She hopes to go back some day. Her mother and stepfather, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond B. Stevens are still living in Bangkok. Mr. Stevens is adviser in foreign affairs to his Siamese majesty's government.

When Miss Hilda Cuniff was in Siam teaching school she noticed all the women had extraordinarily long and flexible fingers. This is because they are trained almost from birth to be dancers. In Siam the hands are more important than the feet in dancing.

Pupil-Mother Budgets Time For Schooling

New York Woman Enters College Same Year as Son.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8 (Spl.).—At 11 o'clock every morning, Mrs. Mathilde Munster, 36-year-old freshman at Hunter College, attends her first class.

But her college classes are only a small part of her day's work. At 7:30 she gets her husband, who is a plumber, off to work, at 8:30 her son, a freshman at City College, starts to school.

Daily Schedule.

Mrs. Munster's classes last until 3:50 p. m. The subway ride from her home in the Bronx takes 40 minutes. In the evenings she does her marketing, finishes her housework, and studies her lessons for the next day.

"It's all a matter of budgeting one's time," she declared yesterday. When she registered at Hunter College this fall, she knew attending would be difficult, and she does not regret it. In fact, after she gets one degree, she may work for another. It's that simple once you get into the swing.

Won Diploma.

Mrs. Munster attended grammar school, but for years, amid her cooking and dishwashing, she has yearned for a higher education. Three years ago she began taking German lessons at night high school. She decided to try for a diploma, received it in three years, and this fall registered for college.

Of German descent, she is majoring in German. She also studies French, Latin, English, and "a little math." Her son, who is one semester ahead of her, helps her with the latter. Her husband applauds her efforts. She tells how after reading in a newspaper once about a woman who did what she was doing, she said, "If she can do it I can."

Old-Time Sand Glass Checks Telephone Time

The only thing more disturbing than talking overtime on the three minutes allowed for a long-distance call is to hang up the receiver and then realize there were 30 or 40 seconds to go.

An Australian business firm has discovered a way to eliminate this sort of nervousness. It has installed old-fashioned sand glasses by the telephones. It takes exactly three minutes for the sand to run through. When the last grain is in sight the employes are supposed to stop talking.

Speech Teacher Has Novel Plan Of Instruction

Mrs. Rose Cohen's Aim Is to Train Children to Be Natural.

TO TEACH A CHILD to be natural, but to make him his natural best, is the aim of Rose Robison Cohen, teacher of speech and juvenile dramatics, whose work with pre-school children has gained much favorable attention in Washington the last two years.

"One of my firmest convictions is that a child should begin studying speech early," she said yesterday at her apartment on Connecticut avenue. "The younger the child, in fact, the better chance he has of mastering speech principles before corrective methods are necessary."

Mrs. Cohen's attractive appearance, pleasant manner and definite ideas about the needs of children convinced the interviewer here was a teacher of dramatics who knew the difference between expression and what used to go by the name of "elocution."

What, then, were her methods? What did she have to offer to take the place of memorized readings, moth-eaten gesture charts and drills on how to walk, how to sit, and how to breathe?

Prefers Pre-School Pupils.

"Well, to begin with, I prefer teaching children of the pre-school age, because they will then have the opportunity to learn the alphabet by my method and will know, consequently, how to pronounce every vowel and consonant the correct way."

To illustrate what she meant Mrs. Cohen produced the chart she uses to teach the alphabet.

"I devised this," she explained, "because I have found the visual method is, by far, the best for any child. By following this chart the child soon learns the name and form of each letter and how each should be pronounced.

"Furthermore, the alphabet comes to mean more than a series of disconnected letters. Each vowel and consonant is a sort of personality."

"Some of the older children, of course," said Mrs. Cohen, "do not have to spend much time on the chart. But I have found almost any speech pupil can stand a little review with it."

Speech, however, is not the only part of Mrs. Cohen's course. For, as the children learn the stanzas accompanying each letter, they carry out the action in pantomime.

"There is no need to teach a child breathing exercises in this connection," she said. "That only makes a boy or girl self-conscious, and my aim is to conquer self-consciousness.

Mrs. Cohen Writes Plays.

By the time her pupils are ready to take part in plays, she said, they have had enough training so they will be natural, even before an audience."

For the most part Mrs. Cohen writes the plays for her pupils.

"They are frequently adaptations from the classics," she explained. First, I tell the children the story. Then they start acting it out, scene by scene, all in pantomime. After that they use the words they think are best suited to the action. Later I type the words, so they will use the same ones for each performance. In this way the pupils actually build the play for themselves and feel more a part of it, than they would otherwise. Then, too, if something happens and they forget the exact words, they can make up others on the spur of the moment."

In addition to teaching pupils of the pre-school age, Mrs. Cohen also trains foreign-born children and those who are mentally deficient.

Glass, Fur and Metals Used in New Fabrics

Schiaparelli Launches Bewildering Array of Novel Wools and Silks for Winter Wear; Unique Colors Also Appear.

PARIS (Spl.).—Glass, fur, gold and silver are woven into the wools and silks which Schiaparelli launches for winter wear in a bewildering array of the most novel fabrics Paris has seen in years.

One shimmering white silk evening gown is woven with spun glass which scintillates in the light. White lapin (rabbit fur) makes a short-sleeved full-length house gown to wear on cold nights. Narrow strips or astrakhan fur sewn into wool—black on black, and gray on cocoa brown—make a new fabric called "caniche," used for snug fall suits. Evening moires shimmer with gold and silver threads.

New colors, too, appear. There are new reddish browns called "cedre" and vivid greens named "petit bois," used for both daytime and evening clothes. A rich purple dubbed "stratosphere" colors evening gowns, and the accents for dark day frocks, while a pinkish gray known as "pigeon's throat" and a cerise-like rose named "cocotte" appear only in night-time array.

Velvets are out in new weaves—one woven in tucked effect called "chichi" and another heavily and unevenly ribbed known as "tree-bark." A little cocotte rose chichi velvet jacket walks out with a steel gray satin gown cut on slender lines, while vivid petit bois green treebark velvet fashions a long evening cape. Cedre brown velvet makes a full-length evening wrap with a cape collar trimmed in mink, worn over a brown velvet evening skirt and a cedre brown moire sleeveless blouse.

Lame in a new glittering gunmetal called "mercure" or in a green and silver combination makes some of the most striking evening gowns of the collection designed with fairly low decolletes and fullness in the front of the skirt where the hem is lifted to show the ankles. Pigeon's throat grey moire makes another interesting frock designed on a tubelike line until it reaches the knees, when it begins to spread, ending at the hem in a hoop a yard in diameter.

Two new evening wraps in the collection have given the stylists something to talk about. One is a jacket woven of soft silky fringe half an inch wide called, "poussin" (chick) because in yellow it resembles the down of a newly hatched chick. The other is a three-quarter-length model of striped gold and silver shaggy lame named "Bourse de Paris," because its double metal weave suggests the stock exchange.

Last, but not least, there is a new silk crepe used for both day and evening frocks woven in crinkled ribbon striped and named "bigamy"—nobody explained why.

Guests Entertained By Arthur C. Smiths

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Smith had as their guests over the week-end Commander and Mrs. Robert Ellsworth Thomas, of Norfolk, Va. They attended the Navy and Virginia football game at the Griffith Stadium, and following the game Commander and Mrs. Thomas were entertained at a dinner party given by Mr. and Mrs. Smith in their Cleveland Park home.

Girls' Voices Called "Bad" By Educator

COLLEGE girls' voices have become so unpleasant and their manners so bad that Dean Virginia Gildersleeve, of Barnard College, has decided to do something about them; at Barnard, at least.

First step in the dean's "Better Voice and Manners" campaign was her address to the new students in which she told them they would be given an opportunity to find out just how bad their voices are.

"You will make a record of your own voice and then listen to it," she told the girls. "After that we will show you how to make your utterances clearer, more effective and agreeable. American women's voices are notoriously bad. It's not the climate that is to blame. It's just something we have drifted into."

And it's something for Barnard girls to drift away from, intimated the dean.

In discussing manners she gave the students these pointers:

"Don't grab plates of cakes at a tea. Don't elbow your way into an elevator. Remember manners are important, a real asset, and a part of your equipment."

Survey of Inner Life Leads to Happiness

Mrs. Anne Tillery Renshaw, who believes that an individual five-year plan of living would better adapt people to the new era and do away with many of the present maladjustments.

Psychologist Says Ones Problem Today Is to Adjust Himself to New Era; Health, Religion and Family Relationships Important.

By Frances Mangum.

"COLUMBUSING into one's own soul on a voyage of spiritual discovery——"

These were her words.

Mrs. Anne Tillery Renshaw, student and teacher of psychology, gazed out of the windows of her Connecticut avenue apartment at the cars and people passing on the streets below.

"We must turn our eyes inward to discover the unexplored continents within ourselves," she said. "Life now is a problem of adjustments, a battle to counteract maladjustments, an effort to be in the swing of things and not on the run to escape them.

"This is a new era," she continued, "a day of kaleidoscopic changes. Many are caught in the current and are straining to swim out instead of bending their energies to progress forward. The rescue, or what might more readily be called the solution, lies in adaptability to the new order. In other words, a new plan of life. To begin with, a five-year plan, thoroughly mapped out and adhered to."

Has Studied Abroad.

Mrs. Renshaw, who has studied psychology at the Universities of Vienna and Berlin, is striving to help both men and women to develop such a plan by first teaching them to find themselves. With words and reasoning and by applying the theories of psychology she seeks to find the root of those evils which retard them in their progress.

She believes the trouble in most lives centers around certain typical difficulties such as inferiority complexes, occupational upheavals, family and social maladjustments, and the lack of coordination between wish and will.

First of all she analyzes the individual by dividing his emotional life into the 15 categories of health, traits, friendships, occupation, aspects, ambitions, desire and will, relationship to relatives, relationship to mother and father, love life, recreation, marital life, attitude toward contracts, religion, intellectual capacities, personal expression, and social activities.

By discussing these things with the student she seeks to straighten out his mode of thinking and feeling so that he can begin his "new planned life" with as few handicaps as possible.

Is No Censor.

"I do not pretend to be mentor or censor," said Mrs. Renshaw. "My problem is to ascertain the cause of bad adjustments and to help the student overcome them.

"Take, for instance, marital life," she continued. "I find that there are more maladjustments here than in any other category. Both men and women must rid themselves of the myth of marriage. They must realize it is no glorious gate to paradise. Instead, it's a business. It should not be entered into with any idea of failure. And both parties should fulfill their contract to prevent failure!"

Love life is another difficult problem, conceded Mrs. Renshaw.

"Of course it should combine happily with matrimony, but there's no use pretending that it always does," she said. "A love that can overide the hetic pattern of modern emotions must be one that combines physical and mental desires."

Health Important.

Health considered in the light of a new plan becomes another complexity too, she believes. Since there is more leisure in the present order she advocates more time given to exercising and outdoor living.

She also finds that any number of people have difficulty with personal expression. In searching for the reason why, she asks "Do you put yourself across?"

If the answer is "no" she continues her analysis until she finds the cause in some feature of their personality, their appearance, voice, posture or mode of expression.

Strictly Speaking

Try These.

1. "I have always thought Cleopatra was pronounced klee-o-PAY-tra, but characters in the current motion picture call it klee-o-PAT-ra. Which is correct? J. F. G."

2. What are the outstanding features of Byzantine architecture? What is the preferable pronunciation of Byzantine?

3. Define the italicized word in this sentence: "Death by the garrote was the most terrible type of punishment ever used in Spain."

4. Where is the accent in aviatrix? Where in aviator?

5. What is a divining rod?

Answers Here.

1. Authorities agree klee-o-PAY-tra is the preferable pronunciation of Cleopatra. Some also give klee-o-PAH-tra as an alternate pronunciation. But there is no accepted authority for klee-o-PAT-ra, notwithstanding its use in the current motion picture.

2. This type of architecture, developed in the Byzantine empire chiefly in the fifth and sixth centuries, is characterized by a central dome over a square space, brick walls and marble and mosaic incrustation. Byzantine may be called biz-AN-tin or BIZ-an-tin (all short vowels) or BIZ-an-tine (to rhyme with "fine"). In fact, you can't miss it.

4. Aviatrix is accented on the third syllable—a-vi-AY-trix. Aviator is accented on the first —AY-vi-a-tor.

5. A divining rod is a forked stick used to locate water or minerals underground.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I am a woman of 30, well educated and engaged in professional work, which I have followed for nine years. The second year after I took up my work I met a man working in a related field, whose job brought him to this city for several months. We were instantly attracted. In fact, I fell in love with him, and I think he liked me tremendously.

• • • •

We were together constantly, although he told me at the start he was engaged to marry another girl. We parted the best of friends when he was called back to his home city, and some time later I had an announcement of his marriage. Occasionally, through the years, I heard from him, such as messages at holidays and once a telegram of congratulation on a piece of work I had done which attracted some publicity.

• • • •

In the meantime, I had several other men friends, but none who interested me so much as this man had. They were mostly pleasant companionships, but there was lacking that complete mutual responsiveness which leads to love and marriage.

Sixteen months ago this man's wife died. I had a note from him, telling me of his loss, and my answer brought a second letter, to which I did not reply. About a year ago my name was again in the news, and again he wrote to me. A considerable correspondence resulted. I found all my old interest reawakening. He wrote charming, serious, stimulating letters.

• • • •

Then, a month ago, he came to Washington on business and called upon me. He paid me serious court and asked me to marry him. Up to the time of our second meeting, I must confess I had hoped something of the sort might happen. But therein lies the problem.

I was shocked at the changes which have overtaken him since I first knew him. He has grown rather stout, slightly bald, and wears glasses. Also, while we seemed to find ourselves in complete accord on all subjects touched upon in correspondence, and while he wrote with great ease and fluency, revealing delicacy of thought and depth of feeling, in actual conversation he is decidedly diffident (he was not so nine years ago) and if it were not for that first meeting, and the exchange of letters, I would not feel that I knew him at all.

• • • •

He has returned to his home to await my answer, "yes" or "no." And I am panic-stricken. I don't know what I should do. Do you think it would be a mistake to marry him?

THIRTY.

New Courtship Required.

DEAR THIRTY: I think your "yes" or "no" to this man must be given wholly on the merit of your emotional reaction to him in person, as he is today; and quite divorced from your nine years' idealistic memory of him.

Conceding a strong mental attraction and spiritual accord between you—and it does appear to exist—nevertheless there must be an equally strong mutual physical attraction if a lasting and happy marriage is to result.

• • • •

Without doubt, some of the happiest marriages are those in which the latter relationship develops slowly, and the existence of the first two-named bonds gives reason to believe it might be same in your case, with one reservation. And that is your mature age. At 30, one should be able to divine one's potential emotional reactions with almost perfect certitude. When one is 20, one may well have to guess.

• • • •

It would be unwise to say either "yes" or "no" just yet. You need more time, and not for reaching a finding on the present evidence, but for getting better acquainted with this man, and thus arriving at a definite knowledge of your reaction to him as he actually is.

Lecturer Gives Best Methods To Cut Weight

Daily Talks Are Made at Downtown Store by Corset Expert.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

FAT WOMEN who want to chisel off a pound or two have only to attend the lectures being given this week by a corset expert in a downtown store. Don't think that because she's the representative of a large corset manufacturing concern she's going to cram these very material aids for emphatic curves down your throat. She does not at all. She gives an interesting and scientific talk on the A B C's of reducing, and she does it in such a way that you listen whether you mean to or not.

Naturally, she points out what a girdle can do to help you to a sylph-like form, but she goes into the diet end of the question, too, and outlines delicious meals that are proof against extra poundage. What is new and best in the way of diets she's prepared to tell you, just as she can demonstrate what's what in corsets.

Those women who believe a corset is a corset for a' that will come away with a new idea about what good ones can do for you, bad ones against you, and why a scientific garment of this sort helps you to proper posture and thereby better health.

She can also tell you why some diets disagree with you and why others don't. After the lecture (at 11 a. m. and 2 p. m. every day) she is more than willing to talk to the individual and discuss her weight problems.

• • • •

A Rhyming Machine.

There's a certain young man in, around and about town who can, when he pleases, turn out rhymes like a rhyming machine. All he needs is a subject, or a dozen subjects, a hint or two on the type of thing you want and he's off in a cloud of jingles.

He was "discovered" only a short time ago by a popular Washington hostess who was giving a party which she wanted to be about ten steps ahead of most parties. She decided to present each guest with a miniature knocker for a place card. The young ryhmester wrote verses, one about each guest caricaturing, praising, and commenting. These were annexed to the knockers. Each guest read his verse between courses—and sips—and of course the party was a howling success.

So often a rhyme or two is such an addition to a party that it's a good idea to know where they can be had at short notice. Sometimes one wants a longer poem for dedication purposes, or a flowery sonnet at other times. At any rate, whatever anyone wants in the way of ready-made rhymes the young man is willing and waiting.

Jungle Fragrance.

One of the most startling perfumes which has greeted our nostrils is a South American scent recently concocted by a Parisian perfumer. Ignoring the fragrance of flowers, the sweetness of grass and dewey woods, the alluring something or other of Oriental balsams and incense, he took for his theme the spicy, exciting, almost fiery fragrance of a South American jungle when all its wild flowers and strange plants are the prey of a noonday sun. Just what he blended or how he achieved this fragrance he has never told. But that he did is proven by the perfume itself which just arrived in Washington a few days ao. It's beautifully put up in queer round bottles embossed with crystal poppies.

A Cream for the Throat.

There is nothing perhaps which tells a woman's age as quickly and as surely as a crepey throat. The skin on her face might be smooth and clear, but the tell-tale lines below her chin make her seem incongruously old.

Just how to remedy them is a question which beauty specialists have been seeking to answer for years. One cosmetician sought the advice of a scientist, who advised her about the remedial properties of certain oils in tightening and firming the muscles. After much difficulty she succeeded in importing these oils and combining them into a cream which, when rubbed and patted into the dry and crepey skin, gives it again a youthful firmness.

Prints as Decorations.

A very wise woman was once reproached for the scarcity of pictures in her home. On either side of the mantel were two old-fashion flower prints; on the opposite wall an extraordinarily attractive Godey print. She pointed to these and said, "Since I have not sufficient money to have fine paintings and the pictures I might choose, I prefer these to anything cheaper but more ornate."

How many homes one enters where the walls are plastered with nondescript pictures and how terribly they detract But a flower print, beautifully done, and in colors harmonious with the furnishings is always attractive and in good taste. A local gift shop has some of these prints now in ivory and gold or walnut frames which cost very little, and are lovely things.

Lectures on Cooking Will Start Oct. 16

It will be an encore appearance of Miss Ruth Chambers, above, when she returns to Washington next week to take charge of The Post-sponsored cooking school in the Washington Auditorium.

MORE THAN 10,000 women met Miss Ruth Chambers at The Washington Post Cooking School last year, registered unqualified approval of her classes, and, as they waved good-by at the concluding session, shouted enthusiastically, "Come back again." In response to that demonstration of popularity, The Post again this year will present Miss Chambers in a four-day lecture series, October 16, 17, 18 and 19, in Washington Auditorium.

Affiliated with the National Live Stock and Meat Board, Miss Chambers will feature meat cookery, but her program will include also the making of a formal menu from soup to liqueurs as well as everyday meals to suit the meager budget. Each session will provide a veritable "Parade of the Foods."

Four sessions of the school will be held, each complete in itself, yet presenting an entirely different program, so that it will be profitable to attend all four of them. Three will be held in the afternoon, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, at 2 o'clock. To permit business women to attend, the concluding session will be held Friday evening at 8 o'clock. Men, too, are invited to the evening lecture, for many of them, though they have little time to spend in the kitchen, have a decided flair for cookery, and will be interested in the culinary secrets Miss Chambers reveals. Admission will be free; everyone interested is invited as a guest of The Post.

Local merchants and food manufacturers are cooperating with The Post in bringing the school to Washington, and many valuable gifts will be made at all sessions. These will include a large number of baskets of foods, several major awards of modern kitchen equipment and many smaller but worthwhile prizes.

A public address system is being installed to carry the speaker's voice to the farthest corner of the Auditorium. This means that even late comers, seated in the rear of the hall, will hear the lecture perfectly.

THE MAN WITHOUT NERVES

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

MR. HUITT looked at Martin critically and decided that all was well. He had seen dead men before, but no one more completely dead than Mr. Roland Martin was at that moment. His hand relaxed. He leaned over the table and pushed the weapon into Mr. Martin's pudgy ungloved hand. With his own fingers still protected by the handkerchief he pressed the fingers of the dead man around the butt and allowed it to drop softly on the carpeted floor. Then he dived once more into that third drawer and produced a letter addressed to himself in Mr. Roland Martin's sprawling handwriting.

He leaned over and pressed his finger firmly upon the bell. The seconds passed. There was a knock at the door and the handle turned. Then, a minute's silence. The knocking was repeated. Mr. Huitt rose to his feet.

Fine Acting.

"Wait a minute, Churchill," he called out, and his voice was noticeably unsteady. "Is the door locked?"

He crossed the room, unlocked the door and grasped Churchill by the shoulder. He was shaking and the fingers of the other hand clutched for a moment at the air.

"I am—just a trifle faint, Churchill," he murmured faintly. "I am not hurt, but—Martin——"

"Good heavens! What's happened to him, sir? Has he had a fit?" Churchill asked in a tone of alarm.

"Shot himself, seated at my table," Mr. Huitt gasped.

"Don't touch anything," he added, as Churchill began to move toward the table. "Better leave everything for the police. There is generally an inspector outside. Call him without delay."

When the police arrived and had examined the body, there was a little preliminary questioning. Then the inspector, his book in his hand, turned to Mr. Huitt.

"You were the only witness, I gather, sir. May I ask your name?"

"James Huitt."

"And your position?"

"I am manager of the bank."

"Do you feel equal to telling me what happened?"

"Certainly," Mr. Huitt replied. "Mr. Martin, who is an old client of the bank, was brought in by one of my clerks, who warned me previously that he was in a state of intoxication. I could see that he had been drinking, but I tried to soothe him as well as I could, because he is going through a very painful time just now on account of severe financial losses which he was very anxious to keep secret. Mr. Martin began questioning me about a large balance which he certainly possessed up to a short while ago, and I was forced to remind him that he had drawn the money out and taken it away with him only the day before yesterday.

Letter Opened.

"He muttered something about that being only a dream and he was obviously in no state to discuss his affairs. I persuaded him to wash his hands and brush his hair, and I thought he was going to sit down and talk reasonably. Instead of that, he threw a note addressed to me upon the table, suddenly drew a small pistol from his pocket, pressed it to his side and shot himself before I could move."

"Have you examined the letter addressed to you, sir?"

"Not yet. It is still on my table."

The letter was brought over. Mr. Huitt sat up in his chair, tore open the envelope and read:

"Dear Mr. Huitt—I am in a terrible state. I am losing my memory. One day I seem to know just how much I have and just what securities you are holding. Another day I have an awful feeling that I have sold all my bonds and drawn out all my balance. I dreamed last night that I was a pauper! I can not bear it any longer—if I am sober enough I shall bring you this letter.

"If anything is left from my estate it is to go to my wife, whose address is care Barton's Bank, Paris."

The signature was nothing but a scrawl. The inspector folded up the letter.

"You won't mind my having this, sir?" he asked.

"Not in the least," Mr. Huitt conceded. "You will let me have it back after the inquest. The directors may wish to see it."

The inquest, on the following day, was perfunctory. Mr. Huitt, called upon, repeated the testimony he had given to the inspector, and handwriting and fingerprinting experts testified that the writing in the note that Roland Martin left was his own; that the fingerprints on the weapon which killed him corresponded with those of the deceased. The coroner's jury brought in its verdict:

"We find that the deceased, Mr. Roland Martin, committed suicide while suffering from temporary insanity."

"The verdict will be recorded," the coroner observed.

Pauline Wins.

Pauline Sarson, after all, resembled her brother in many ways. She was inclined to be obstinate, she liked having her own way and she had charm enough to get it, as a rule. She approached young Tyssen, on the morning of the golf matches, with the happy air of one born to easy victories.

Mr. Tyssen," she exclaimed, "what is this terrible news? They tell me you don't want to play this afternoon."

"It isn't that I don't want to, Miss Sarson," he answered eagerly. "The fact is my leg——"

He looked drearily at the ground.

"What time do the four balls finish?" he asked.

"At a quarter to 8," she answered. "You won't be about as long as that, though. You will go out first in both matches."

He was obviously shaken. His leg had healed marvelously and his stick was already unneeded.

"What time does the club train get in?" he inquired.

She looked at him in surprise.

"The train dad generally comes by? Ten minutes to 6."

He hesitated.

"Miss Pauline," he confided. "I don't want to seem stupid and ungracious. I don't want to tell you any falsehoods about my golf, either. I can play a bit. I have played ever since I was a boy. I didn't want to play down here, though."

"Why not?" she asked. "Why not—when I want you to so much?"

"I can't explain," he replied. "Anyway, I'll take a risk. I'll go and put my things on."

Huitt Attended..

Mr. Huitt was late, that afternoon, in arriving at the golf course. Evidently his arrival was timely, for a crowd was gathered around the twelfth, the nearest green. From the top of the hill facing them another and a larger crowd was descending.

"Dear me, dear me," Mr. Huitt said to his neighbor, the local coal merchant. "I had no idea that golf was such a popular game hereabouts."

"You take my word for it, sir," he rejoined excitedly. "There's a sight more to golf than I ever dreamed of. This 'ere 'Society,' they've been down here year after year and knocked the stuffings out of our gents. This time 'Paradise' seems to be laying it across them proper. You see the four ball coming down the hill, sir? That's young Mr. Sarson—him as was captain of Oxford, though he plays now for 'Paradise'—and his partner, who is a 'Paradise' man, too, but his name I don't rightly remember. All I can tell you is that they are six up against the 'Society' and if they win this hole, it's all over. That young 'Paradise' gent walking with Mr. Sarson, he's driven plumb on the green, not far short of 300 yards, and Mr. Sarson's ain't such a dusty shot, either."

Breathless Moment.

There was a low murmur of suspense. A tall, lanky young man, with rather awkward shoulders, stepped easily over the rail and approached his ball. Mr. Huitt's neighbor poked him in the ribs.

"That's him, sir," he muttered. "That's him as 'as done all the play. His drive! Got this for a two. Got a half in his pocket, anyway."

Mr. Huitt missed, perhaps, the full drama of his life for, in studying the position of the various balls, he did not raise his head sufficiently to recognize Tyssen. The latter, amid a hurshed silence, reached his ball, stooped down on one knee as though to trace its line to the hole, stood upright—his elbows almost touching his sides—drew back his club and struck the ball firmly and musically. Its progress toward the hole was marked with a chorus of crescendo murmurs. There was a roar of applause as, finally, it dropped.

It was in the midst of that roar that Mr. Huitt lifted his head to see who this paragon might be, took note of his awkward attempts to escape from the crowd and to return the freely offered handshakes of his opponents—and knew the truth. • • •

Milhaven Called.

To think that for months he should have scoffed at that awkward-looking, loutish being, scoffed at his physique, scoffed at his apparent simplicity! His mind wandered backward. He saw the famous golf links at Sydney, with flags flying from the pavilion, and heard the roar of voices.

The local schoolboy who had beaten the champions of the world at their own game! He had been a golfer himself in those days. He made his way stealthily toward the gate. Everyone else was trooping back to the pavilion. It was a moment, this, for great celebrations! Mr. Huitt turned and escaped across the common to his flower-set cottage home.

His voice was clear and distinct enough, when Milhaven, the receiver in his hand, was brought to speak and then to listen.

"My dear Huitt," the latter protested, "you know how I loathe the telephone. Why this insistence?"

"Because your lordship, as usual, was right the other morning. There is no time to get hold of the major. I was forced to ring you up. The incredible has happened!"

"Do you mean that you have bungled?"

"No miracle of that sort," was the steely reply.

"The inquest?"

"Perfect. What has happened came from off the map."

"That will do," Milhaven answered, still languidly. "I will pick you up at the byway at 11 o'clock."

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Diet in Urinary Infections.

IN THE last few years many attempts have been made to devise a plan by means of which the urinary tract may be freed from infection. A recent discussion in this column pointed out that bacteria often gain entrance to the urine collecting space in the kidney and give rise to the condition known as pyelitis. Because of the peculiar situation of the kidney the only antiseptics able to reach this area are those that can be transported by the blood or that can be introduced through a rather highly technical procedure by means of a ureteral catheter.

Three or four years ago Helmholz and Clark called attention to the fact that a diet high in fat would render the urine sufficiently acid to prevent the growth of bacteria. This diet is called a ketogenic diet because of the liberation of ketone bodies, a particular chemical combination of carbon, oxygen, and hydrogen.

With many persons great difficulty is encountered in using the so-called ketogenic diet. This is particularly true in children with finicky appetites and in patients whose symptoms include chills and fever due to the infection. In order to use the plan successfully the patient must be able to digest and burn up fats within his own body.

After the diet is started several days must elapse before the maximum sterilizing effect upon the urine is obtained. There appears to be some other factor at work than the mere condition known as acidity.

The condition known as acidosis must be guarded against and the ketogenic diet must not be continued indefinitely. If a marked amelioration of symptoms does not occur within a week, or if bacteria in the urine are not greatly reduced during this period, it will be well to restore the diet balance. Later the patient may be returned to the ketogenic diet if other methods do not prove efficient.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

WHEN A CHILD won't eat, first ascertain that he is in good health and if so, take his food away until hunger breaks down his stubbornness. That, of course, is the advice of physicians and other authorities, yet every mother knows that there are many cases which do not require such drastic action. Perhaps the child wants his meal but dawdles over it; or he balks at eating one particular vegetable that should be included in a well-balanced diet; or perhaps he is just bored with the business of eating three more or less monotonous meals a day. What's to be done then?

Attractive dishes will help a great deal. Get a bowl that has an animal picture at the bottom and make a game of eating up all the oatmeal to reveal the dog or the rabbit or the kitten. Pitchers that come in the shape of animals always interest a child. There is, for instance, a cow pitcher with the mouth for a spout.

And don't forget that dessert always can be used as an incentive for eating less interesting food. When you are making cup cakes, set aside one to be decorated more fancifully than the rest. Or put a single candle on it, even though it isn't a birthday. With his eyes on that appetizing dessert, the child will be willing to eat anything that is set before him in order to win it.

Peach Stains Are Removed With Glycerin

TO PARAPHRASE the old saying, a hint in time saves a lot of steps. Today's time savers should prove as useful to you as to the housewives who sent them.

Perhaps you, too, have ways and means of lessening your housework. Send in your household hints to Susan Mills, The Washington Post, so that others may benefit. The household hints appear on this page every Tuesday.

Monument's 'Corset' of Steel Drawn Tighter—and Bigger

Cameraman peers from window and snaps steeplejacks atop the steel scaffolding of the Washington Monument as it nears completion. The steel webs are now even with the windows.

Scaffolding Catches Up With Tourists at Top of Huge Shaft.

The Washington Monument scaffolding caught up with the tourists yesterday.

For the first time since August 20, when that amazing red steel spiderweb began to climb the stony pile, your cousin from St. Louis can talk through one of those windows at the top of the shaft to a fellow named Joe who walks along a 6-inch girder on the outside as though he didn't know there wasn't anything at all between him and the ground 500 feet below except a lot of fresh air.

Your cousin from St. Louis probably won't do anything of the sort, not knowing which of those fellows out there is Joe. She probably will look out the window at the plaster of paris model of the city that is the Capital from there and say, "Oh!"

That's more or less what most of the monument tourists did yesterday. The darkly shimmering stretches of the Potomac and all the rest of the green and white panorama of the Capital was still the main attraction. The men who are to give the shaft its first furbishing were only the sideshow.

Sideshow, or not, you can bet those fellows out there were glad to have at last climbed themselves into a position where there was some chance of their being appreciated. You can imagine how awesome one steel worker must look to another steel worker. And a fellow like Joe deserves an appreciative audience.

With the scaffolding within 50 feet of the Monument's peak, an official of Alexander Howie, Inc., the company that is doing the job, said he didn't think soap, water and brushes would give the shaft a very good bath, which is what almost everyone thought was one of the reasons for putting up the spiderweb in the first place. He said he didn't want his name to get in the papers, though.

An official of the National Park Service, the monument's custodian, said he didn't want his name in the papers either, but he thought what the contractor's man said was "not well considered," and that anyway the cleaning part of the job wasn't particularly important.

What the National Park Service is interested in is getting the monument in shape to withstand a century or so of weather wear, patching it up in spots, cleaning out old mortar and putting in new. It would rather the contractors didn't change the appearance of the pile very materially, because, this official said, that would constitute an offense against the people who designed it.

The scaffolding will reach the top some time next week. Three months should finish the furbishing, it is estimated, and 14 days later the scaffolding will be down.

Stolen Linen Is Found Under Cell Bunk.

Idaho Springs, Colo., Oct. 8 (AP).—The last place in which officers searched for $50 worth of stolen linen was the city jail—but it was the best place.

They found the linen under a cell bunk. On the bunk was Tom Fagan, 40, a transient.

Police accused him of stealing the linen, sheets and pillow cases from a trunk. They said he took it to a place near the jail and then, after being given a cell in which to sleep, got the linen and hid it.

Methodists Urge War on Rum Traffic

Dancing, Card Playing Also Condemned at Conference

Increase in Drunkeness Cited in Resolution at Baltimore.

Baltimore, Oct. 8 (AP).—A resolution condemning the liquor traffic, modern dancing and the card table, and looking toward legislation designed to stop the flow of alcoholic beverages was adopted here today by the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The resolution, offered by the Rev. W. D. King, of Falls Church, Va., was accepted immediately and passed without comment or debate. It sets forth that investigations by church boards have disclosed an increase of 31 per cent in drunkenness in 192 American cities since repeal and asserts that liquor interests have defied the curbs and checks which State laws and Federal courts have attempted to put on them.

Members of the church were urged in the resolution to abstain from manufacturing or dispensing alcoholic beverages, to refuse to rent property for such purposes, and to abstain from patronage of firms engaged in such business.

"Divorce Menace" Hit.

The resolution also suggested uniform laws in all States to combat the "divorce menace." Further bulwark against the "evil of drink," the resolution stated, would be provided by active cooperation with organizations sponsoring the observance of Sunday, uniform divorce laws, cleaner and better movies and by "pointing out the evils of the modern dance and the card table."

Conference is scheduled to end late tonight or early tomorrow with announcement of pastoral appointments for the coming year.

Bishop E. B. Mouzon and other church leaders are at work on the appointments, but formal announcement was not expected until late tonight.

The conference voted to hold next year's meeting at Central Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Staunton, Va.

Ordination Ceremony.

Yesterday's program was centered about the ordination of seven elders and ten deacons into the conference, with Bishop Paul B. Kern preaching the ordination sermon.

"We need a new, dynamic plea of God in trying to build a new social world," Bishop Kern said. "The only way we can build substantial financial institutions is to build honest men. We also need God in the more just distribution of wealth of the world. It will be an evil day when the Christian conscience accepts the present distribution as the final one of the social order."

The governing boards of the three branches of Methodism—Methodist Episcopal Church South, Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Protestant Church—will meet here tomorrow to make final plans for the Methodist sesquicentennial which begins Wednesday in commemoration of the founding of Methodism in America.

Delegates to the celebration are expected from many sections of the United States and from other countries.

Escape Not Fault Of Richmond Jail, Council Decides

Richmond, Va., Oct. 8 (AP).—Richmond's city council sees little need for a modernization of the jail from which Walter Legenza and Robert Mais have been missing more than a week, a poll of councilmen indicated today.

Jacob Umlauf, councilmanic president, summed up the opinion of most of the body's members when he said:

"It wasn't the fault of the jail that the two gangsters got away. You can't blame an affair of that sort on a building."

Limit Off

Transportation of More Than Gallon Allowed.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 8 (AP).—State liquor store managers were authorized by the A. B. C. Board, in a regulation issued today, to issue permits for transportation of more than a gallon of liquor at a time within the State.

Heretofore permits for transportation of more liquor than the State law allows an individual to obtain in a single purchase had to be obtained from the board itself.

In giving this discretionary power to store managers the board announced that it was doing it as a matter of convenience to such persons as rural residents who might avoid making trips to the city by having a neighbor make liquor purchases for them.

The man who wants to take liquor home for friends and finds his purchases will total more than one gallon now can transport the entire amount legally by obtaining a permit from the manager of the store at which he makes his purchase.

100-Year-Old Princess to Speak

DR. CHARLOTTE DE GOLIERE DAVENPORT, 100-year-old Russian princess, who will speak at Fredericksburg, Va., Wednesday on the thesis that unselfish efforts to better humanity and the cultivation of a universal friendship will solve major social and political problems.

Unselfishness Will End Poverty, Russian Princess, 110, Declares

Dr. Charlotte de Goliere Davenport, Mentally Alert Despite Years Will Lecture in Fredericksburg Wednesday.

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 8 (Spl.). Unselfish efforts to uplift humanity, without regard for personal advantage, would eliminate poverty, war and industrial conflict, if adopted as a universal philosophy, says Dr. Charlotte de Goliere Davenport, Russian princess, who will lecture here Wednesday. Practicing such principles have enabled her to attain the age of 110 years and enjoy fully the "abundant life."

Mentally alert, brilliant and physically strong despite her years, Dr. Davenport today scored communism as "stupidity of a grasping lower class," lauded President Roosevelt as an idealist, but declared that the Chief Executive could never "feel with" the masses.

Relating anecdotes that kept many younger listeners in a state of mental overwork, the physician—she was the first woman student in the medical school of the University of Vienna—chatted informally today of her experiences with famous persons. She told of pursuing music studies under Franz Liszt in Vienna, and of spending a "most thrilling" year with Robert Louis Stevenson when he was writing "Treasure Island."

She voiced her belief that fusion of all classes could never become a reality. "There will always be classes of people," she said, "but those classes will some day be based on mental ability, rather than material wealth."

She vigorously denounced snobbishness among persons in different social strata.

"The greatest aristocrat," she said, "is the greatest democrat. The true aristocrat is the backbone of democracy."

Accomplished Musician.

"Enjoy your life," she said, "not by seeking always your own advantage, but by seeking to do your part toward bettering the world—toward uplifting humanity."

Dr. Davenport is an accomplished musician. During her interview she mentioned Liszt's training, and immediately stepped from her chair to a piano and played a selection from Tchaikowsky.

Born in St. Petersburg, she was exiled, with her family, and spent her childhood in Geneva, Switzerland. She speaks 8 languages fluently, is married to an American, and has 11 sons.

"If you would live a long and happy life," she said, "follow the teachings of some great philosopher. Spinoza, who taught that the world was fundamentally good, and who urged us to seek the development of that good, is my teacher. You are as young as your faith, as old as your doubt."

Wild Bill Hallahan Also Available For Manager Frisch of Cards; Paul Dean Pitching-Batting Hero

Youngster Gives 7 Hits and Bats In Winning Marker in 7th.

By George Kirksey.

DETROIT, Oct. 8 (U.P.).—As shadows lengthened across Navin Field late this October day, the Detroit Tigers still were one game away from the world's baseball championship.

Fighting back heroically after two straight defeats on their home field, the St. Louis Cardinals evened the World Series at three games each with a thrilling 4-to-3 triumph today over the Tigers before 44,551 baseball-crazed customers.

The Cardinals' victory, in which they beat "Schoolboy" Rowe, brought the series down to the seventh game, which will be played tomorrow with all the chips on the table—$2,000 riding on every pitch, the difference between the winner's and the loser's share to each player.

Auker Is Chosen.

Manager iMckey oCchrane of the Tigers announced tonight he had definitely decided to start Eiden Auker in the deciding game of the world series against the Cardinals tomorrow.

In the meanwhile, Frankie Frisch, the Cards' pilot, had not made his choice although it was considered likely that he would pitch Jerome (Dizzy) Dean, who has asked for the job. "Wild Bill" Hallahan also is available.

Pitches Magnificently.

Once more there's joy down in Holdenville, Okla., where only gloom had been since the great "Dizzy" Dean was plunged to defeat by the Tigers in the fifth game yesterday at St. Louis. Paul Dean, kid brother of the great "Dizzy," wiped the blot off the Dean escucheon today with a magnificently pitched game which may be the inspiration which will carry the Cardinals on to baseball's highest prize in the deciding game.

Paul Dean was more than a pitcher for the Cardinals today. He was Horatius at the bridge—fortified with a strong arm and a stronger heart. When his arm failed him he called on his heart, which beat back ever challenge, every counter-thrust, every desperate drive of the Tigers.

Cool, Smart, Courageous.

To see him working out there in the clutches, with destruction hovering around his head, you never would have known he was a 21-year-old country boy, fresh from the cotton patch. He was as cool as a Mathewson, smart as a Chief Bender and as courageous as a Walter Johnson.

Through the sixth, seventh and eighth innings, the Tigers called upon every weapon at their command to slash their way past Dean, and on to their first world's baseball title in 32 years. But Dean stopped every charge, stopped it cold in one of the greatest stands in World Series annals.

Not only did Dean turn back every Detroit challenge in those heart-quickening late innings but he slashed out the hit that won the game. With the score deadlocked, 3-3, in the seventh inning, Dean conked one of Schoolboy Rowe's fast balls into right field for a single which sent home little Leo Durocher, another vital factor in the Cards' triumph, with the deciding run.

Dean's victory gave him his second triumph over the Tigers, having pitched the Cards to a 4-1 victory in the third game. He gave up seven hits today, fanned four men, and walked two.

Schoolboy Rowe, the towering El Dorado, Ark., giant, who halted the Cards in the second game with a 3-2 victory in 12 innings, wasn't quite equal to the task today. He pitched gamely, but not as ably as Paul Dean. He never gave up even in the face of a lost cause. He went down trying to the last. With two out in the ninth he came to bat, and drove a long liner deep to center field, which Ernie Orsatti had to race far back to gather for the final out. The Cards made ten hits off Rowe, who fanned five and did not issue a base on balls.

The Cardinals No. 2 hero today, and no so far behind Paul Dean, was Leo Durocher, the weak-batting shortshop who didn't make a hit until the fourth game. Durocher cracked out three hits today and scored two runs, including the one which won. He played brilliantly in the field. In the sixth inning he threw out Marvin Owen to retire the side, with a runner tearing for home. In the seventh he cut off a run which would have tied the score with a great stop and throw to Catcher Bill Delancey at the plate.

Off to Early Start.

St. Louis raked Rowe for a run in the opening inning. With one down, Jack Rothrock doubled to right and scored on Ducky Wucky Medwick's single to right.

With two out in the third, the Tigers tied the score, 1 to 1. Jo Jo White walked. With Mickey Cochrane at bat, white started for second. Delancey had him with a great throw, but Frisch dropped the ball. White and Frisch went down together in a heap and the ball rolled back toward hte pitcher's box. White regained his feet quickly and reached third before the ball was retrieved by Durocher. Cochrane beat out a roller to Collins and White scored. Cochrane collided with Dean, covering first, on the play. He injured his knee seriously, but limped through the rest of the game.

The Cards forged ahead again in the fifth. Durocher beat out a hit back of second and Dean sacrificed him along. Pepper Martin banged a single to left, scoring Durocher. Martin raced all the way to third on Goose Goslin's wild throw to

Rowe Hit Hard, Game's Detail Reveals

Cardinals Loose on Field, but Their Bats Crack Schoolboy's Slants.

FIRST INNING. CARDINALS—Martin lifted a high fly to Owen, who made the catch behind the pitching box. Rothrock doubled along the left-field line on a hit that Fox handled slowly. Frisch lined to Owen, who made a nice stab near the foul line. Medwick lined a hit to right, scoring Rothrock, and ran to second on the throw-in. Collins lifted a high fly to Fox near the bleachers in right center. One run, 2 hits, no errors, 1 left.

FIRST INNING. TIGERS—White fanned swinging hard at fast ball. Cochrane got a scratch single on a grounder that Frisch stopped, but was unable to handle. Gehringer grounded out, Frisch to Collins, and Cochrane advanced to second. Goslin hit sharply to Martin, who knocked down the ball, fell to the ground, but got up quickly to make a throw that barely nipped the runner at first. No runs, 1 hit, no errors, 1 left.

SECOND INNING. CARDINALS—Delancey hit a long drive that Goslin caught while backed up against the bleacher screen in left field. Orsatti grounded out, Owen to Greenberg. Durocher sent a hopper that Owen scooped up with his gloved hand on the run and made the putout at first on a nice throw. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

SECOND INNING. TIGERS—Rogell fanned, swinging. Greenberg fanned, missing a wide curve badly for the third strike. Owen grounded out, Martin to Collins. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

THIRD INNING. CARDINALS—Dean grounded out to Greenberg, unassisted. Martin grounded out, Gehringer to Greenberg. Rothrock bounded a hit through the box. Gehringer stopped the ball, but there was no play at first. Frisch grounded to Gehringer and was tossed out at first. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

THIRD INNING. TIGERS—Fox popped high behind the pitcher's box. Rowe fanned, swinging. White walked on a fourth straight ball. Cochrane up. Ball one, and White stole second. Frisch dropped Delancey's throw and as the ball rolled loose, White ran to third. The official scorer gave Frisch a two-base error, ruling White did not steal second. Cochrane grounded to Collins and was called safe at first as he beat the first baseman's toss to Dean, White scoring. Cochrane caught his foot in the bag and went down in a heap, his leg apparently being twisted by the force of his fall. Gehringer lifted a high fly to Rothrock. One run, one hit, one error, one left.

FOURTH INNING. CARDINALS—The crowd gave Cochrane a big cheer as he came slowly from the dugout with his equipment on. Medwick singled over second base. Collins grounded to Gehringer and Medwick was forced at second, Gehringer to Rogell. Delancey fanned swinging hard. Orsatti flied to Goslin. No runs, one hit, no errors, one left.

FOURTH INNING. TIGERS—Goslin grounded out, Frisch to Collins. Rogell lifted a high foul to Delancey off the first-base line. Greenberg sent a high foul back of third which was caught by Durocher. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

FIFTH INNING. CARDINALS—Durocher singled on a hard grounder that Gehringer was unable to handle near second base. Dean sacrificed on a bunt along the first base line, Greenberg making the putout, unassisted, as Durocher ran to second. Martin hit sharply past Rogell, scoring Durocher, and Pepper ran all the way to third as Goslin threw wildly past Cochrane. It was a single for Martin and an error by Goslin. Rothrock bounced to Rogell and Martin scored while Rothrock was being tossed out at first. Frisch lifted a high foul to Cochrane. Two runs, two hits, one error, none left.

FIFTH INNING. TIGERS—Owen flied to Orsatti. Fox lifted a high fly to Orsatti. Rowe lined to Orsatti, who made a sparkling catch in deep left center on the dead run. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

SIXTH INNING. CARDINALS—Medwick fanned swinging at a low curve. Collins fanned swinging lustily. DeLancey lifted a high fly to Goslin. No run, no hits, no errors, none left.

SIXTH INNING. TIGERS—White walked, the fourth ball being wide. Cochrane hit sharply to Collins for his third straight single, sending White to third. Collins bobbled and threw the ball along the baseline, but it rolled away from him and almost into the Cardinal dugout. Gehringer's grounder went through Dean's legs and White scored as the Tiger second baseman reached first safely. Cochrane stopped at second and Dean was charged with an Frischmen Are Positive Pendulum Has Swung in Their Favor.

DETROIT, Oct. 8 (AP).—"Hold that Tiger!"

That piercing yell reverberated from 23 throats as the triumphant St. Louis Cardinals stormed into their dressing room today after walloping the Tigers, 4 to 3, in a nerve-tingling game to even up the series.

They were delirious with excitement and confident now that the pendulum has swung in their favor. With either Wild Bill Hallahan or the great Dizzy Dean as their pitcher tomorrow, they figure victory is just ahead of them, and they are cocksure, deep down in their fighting hearts, of grasping it.

Frisch Grins Widely.

Frankie Frisch, the Cardinal leader, grinning like a schoolboy, shook hands with his victorious pitcher, Paul Dean, slapping him on the back and giving him a good-natured dig in the ribs.

"I was praying all the time that big guy would stick it out," Frisch said. "I'm immensely proud of my players. They never give up. They are fighters. They don't know when they are licked."

Frisch said tonight he may not make up his mind until just before the start of the game. His decision might depend on the pitching selection of Mickey Cochrane, Tiger manager.

Doesn't Mind Cold.

Dizzy Dean was begging for the chance to be selected.

"If I'm that lucky," he beamed, "I'm going to beat 'em. I've got a cold but I won't mind that a bit."

"Who's going to pitch for the Tigers?" he asked. "They'd better put 'em all in there."

With tremendous, boyish enthusiasm, every member of the Cardinals swarmed around Paul Dean.

Dizzy reached over to shake his hand.

"You're quite a pitcher, boy," he said.

Pepper Martin, the Cardinal third baseman, chimed in: "I'll tell the cock-eyed world. You can have anything I've got."

Photographers Snap.

Then Paul grasped the last ball he threw in the game and kissed it, while 20 or more photographers snapped their shots.

Somebody asked Dizzy what he thought of his brother and he blurted out:

"Boy, they don't make them no better."

Gloom as thick as fog hung over the Tiger dressing room, with the Tigers growling and Manager Cochrane fighting mad. When he came through the door he slammed his mask against a trunk 20 feet away and then took off his skin-guards, hurling them to the same spot. Then he sat down in his private cage which he uses as a dressing room.

Cochrane didn't know whom he would start tomorrow.

Holds Back Decision.

"I may decide to send that big guy right back at them," he said, meaning Rowe. "I won't know until tomorrow. We had two or three good chances to win today, but that break at third base when Umpire Owens called me out in the sixth inning went against us and we lost a swell opportunity to score.

"It was a tough game to lose and it's been the toughest series I've ever played in. It was tough to get beat by two hitters like Paul Dean and Durocher. That ball which Dean hit for the winning run in the seventh was a curve ball that simply hung there. All he had to do was to crack at it. Rowe didn't have the stuff that he had when he won last Thursday."

Serrian, Hughes To Fight Monday

Added to Walker-Brown Card at Auditorium.

Mickey Serrian, seventh ranking welterweight, was signed yesterday to do eight rounds of fisticuffing with Frankie Hughes in the semi-final to the Mickey Walker-Natie Brown heavyweight bout at the Auditorium next Monday.

Serrian has been creating somewhat of a sensation in the last six months, in an extensive campaign which he hopes will carry him to a title shot at Jimmy McLarnin. Hughes, a stiff-punching veteran, conquered Sid Silas in his debut here.

A special eight-rounder will feature Bingo Joe Banovic and Mickey Taylor. One other six is in the making. Because of the expense incurred by Turner in booking Walker and Serrian, tickets will be scaled from $1.10 to $3.30, a boost of $1.10 on the top price.

35,000 Storm Gates With Park Full

Timber Used to End Rush; Fans Gather Early to Buy Today's Seats.

DETROIT, Oct. 8 (AP).—Before the same gates where a milling near-mob of 35,000 frantic fans had charged police lines in a futile effort to witness today's world series game, other thousands, glum and dispirited, stood in line tonight to purchase tickets for tomorrow's game, that they had hoped would no be necessary.

Reserved seats for the seventh game between the St. Louis Cardinals and the Detroit Tigers went on sale at 5 p. m. Bleacher seats will be withheld until tomorrow morning, but lines were forming at those windows, too, as the dyed-in-the-woo lfans prepared to brave another night in the chilly open air.

It was first come, first served in the distribution of reserved seats. There was no time for mail orders and the grand rush was expected to continue tomorrow morning.

Windows Closed Early.

There will have to be a tremendous crush, however, to equal today's near-riot, that, started when the ticket windows were slammed down two hours before game time, the last bleacher ticket sold.

Mounted and foot patrolmen quickly formed lines in front of the gates, as quickly, the more or less orderly lines of disappointed patrons broke and rushed the gates.

Spasmodic efforts to break through the augmented police lines continued until finally heavy timbers were thrown across the gates.

By that time, however, 15,000 other fans had joined the 20,000 who were still in line when the ticket sale stopped and those in front could not get out.

Furr Fails to Appear Before Boxing Moguls

Phil Furr, District welterweight champion, who had planned to appear before the boxing commission yesterday to announce he was ready to go through with the Bob Wilson bout, did not appear.

Furr, who recently refused to go through with the Wilson bout after being signed for it by his manager, had been ordered to get himself in what he considers proper condition, then carry out the contract before accepting any other local engagements.

Mrs. Clark's 83 Wins Medal In Tourney

Army and Navy Star Leads Middle Atlantic Field by Four Strokes.

By Dave Herman.

FALLING heir to another competitive course record, Mrs. David Clark, Army and Navy Country Club's star golfer, shot an 83 yesterday at Washington Golf and Country Club to win the medal in the Middle Atlantic championship.

MRS. CLARK.

Outdistancing a field of close to 50 golfers in the 18-hole qualifying round, in which few out-of-town players competed, Mrs. Clark, former Virginia champion, traversed the first nine in 42, and the incoming side in 41, finishing with a brace of fives.

Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, of Indian Spring, a former Middle Atlantic finalist, trailed Mrs. Clark by four strokes with her 46—41—87 that included 7s on the fourth and eighth holes, where she suffered penalty strokes.

Only two other golfers cracked 90, and the scoring for such a tournament was so abnormally high that 102 made the qualifying grade.

Cochrane-Rowe On Hospital List

Bad Knee Lays Up Mike; Handshake Too Rough for Schoolboy.

DETROIT, Oct. 8 (Spl.).—The defeat of the Tigers in today's World Series game was echoed tonight in the presence of Manager Mickey Cochrane and Schoolboy Rowe in Providence Hospital for examination of injuries.

The Tigers' pilot underwent treatment for a spiked knee, but it was no ordinary accident that sent Rowe to the infirmary.

Flaring headlines in Detroit newspapers announced the fact that the Tigers' ace pitcher had suffered an injury to his throwing hand when it was gripped too enthusiastically in a pre-game handshake by Joe E. Brown, movie comedian.

May Be Available.

Rowe aggravated the bruised knuckles during the game which saw the Cardinals reach him for ten hits. He was discharged from the hospital tonight with the statement that he would be available for duty tomorrow, if necessary.

Eve nthe very home-townish Detroit newspapers reported that "the School Boy was the victim of one o fthe most unbelievable accidents in World Series history."

Offers Odds of 2-3 On Cards to Win

Betting Prober Rates Tigers Even Money to Cop.

ST. Louis, Oct. 8 (AP).—After the Cardinal's 4-3 victory over Detroit in the sixth game of the World Series this afternoon, Tom Kearney, St. Louis betting commissioner, offered 2-to-3 odds that Red Birds would win the final game and the series in Detroit tomorrow.

Kearney offered even money that the Tigers would win the series with a victory in the seventh game.

Soccer League Formed.

Frederick, Md., Oct. 8 (Spl.).—Final plans will be made at a meeting Wednesday night for the county soccer league season which will begin Sunday. Dorsey Shipley, president, announced today that six teams, Frederick, Brunswick, Walkersville, Emmitsburg, Middletown and Mount Airy are ready to start.

Kissing Bee

Brothers Dean Hook-up in Fraternal Embrace.

Detroit, Oct. 8 (U.P.).—Paul (Daffy) Dean, who staved off a world series defeat, and Jerome (Dizzy) Dean—who didn't lift a finger—hooked up in a hearty kissing bee after today's triumph.

A baseball separated the fraternal embrace, but the partners of Dean & Dean kissed and rekissed that grimy pellet with equal fervor. It was the one with which Daffy pulled a tie out of the fire in today's sixth game.

2-Grid Games In Capital Today

Roosevelt High Is Host to Devitt; Eastern to Face St. John's.

Roosevelt vs. Devitt Prep, at Roosevelt Stadium, 3:30 p. m.
FRIDAY.

Episcopal vs. Augusta Military Academy, at Alexandria.

HIGH SCHOOL football for Washington and nearby Virginia opens a busy week today, with Eastern and Roosevelt opening a scholastic program calling for ten games in the next five days.

Coach Lynn Woodworth sends his Roosevelt eleven into action twice during the week despite the start of the interhigh series a week from today. Roosevelt meets Western a week from Friday and Tech plays Eastern in the series opener next Tuesday.

While Roosevelt is meeting Devitt Prep at 3:30 p. m. today at Roosevelt Stadium, Eastern takes on its third opponent of the season, clashing with scrappy St. John's in Eastern Stadium, also at 3:30.

Devitt's First Contest.

The game will be Devitt's first of the season and Roosevelt's second. The Rough Riders opened their campaign with a 6-6 tie with the Alumni. Eastern defeated Alexandria, 7 to 6, but fell before Episcopal, 12 to 0. St. John's redeemed its 27-to-0 defeat at the hands of Western by holding Central to a 13-to-0 victory.

Roosevelt's second opponent of the week pits it against Gonzaga at Roosevelt Stadium. The only other city school playing Friday is Landon Prep, which opens its season against St. Andrew's at Middletown, Del. Alexandria High's powerful eleven travels southward to meet Massanutten Military Academy and Washington-Lee plays Luray High at Ballston.

To Invade Virginia.

On Saturday, Central and Western journey forth against foreign foes, Central meeting Maury High, of Norfolk, at Norfolk, and Western playing Newport News High at Newport News. Although still unscored on, Western is far from overconfident, still mindful of the 24-to-0 defeat it received last year from the Virginians.

In the only Saturday home game, St. Alban's meets Shenandoah Military Academy at St. Alban's. It will be the Episcopal prep school's second game of the season. Boys Latin, of Baltimore, won the opener for both teams, 6 to 0, last week. Episcopal High School resumes its suicide schedule against Augusta Military Academy at Alexandria in the only other Saturday contest for this section.

Ruth's Hopes As '35 Pilot Are Dim

Won't Sign Player Pact; Doesn't Plan Role as Pinch-Hitter.

Potential Yankees Job MustWait; McCarthy Pleases Ruppert.

DETROIT, Oct. 8 (AP).—Dynamic, colorful Babe Ruth, the biggest drawing card baseball has known, read himself out of the game as a player today, but said he would be delighted to sign with some major league club as manager.

"I want to remain in baseball," Ruth, here for the World Series, said today, "but I will not sign a player's contract next year with any club.

"I have no intention of sitting on the bench or being around merely for pinch-hitting purposes. That doesn't appeal to me at all."

Hasn't Had Offer.

Then, to make it clear that he wasn't talking about any particular club, he added:

"I haven't had an offer to take hold of any club, nor have I anything definite in mind as to where I might land if I left the Yankees, but I have made up my mind as to what I want to do, if there is any future for me in the big leagues."

He also made it clear that there isn't any serious prospect that he might supplant Joe McCarthy as manager of the Yankees next season.

Colonel Is Satisfied.

"To avoid any misunderstanding," he said in a formal statement, "here's what happened. Before leaving New York I had a meeting with Col. Ruppert and asked: 'Colonel, are you satisfied with McCarthy for next year?'

"The colonel replied he was and I said, 'That suits me—that's all I wanted to know.'

"I did not say that it was a case of McCarthy or me.

"This much is certain—I want to remain in baseball, but I will not sign a player's contract next year with any club.

"In view of Col. Ruppert's decision I will make my plans accordingly."

Refused Newark Bid.

The fact that McCarthy's three-year contract as manager of the Yankees still has a year to run is one very effective barrier to Ruth's well-known ambition to pilot the club with which he gained fame—and a fortune. A year ago the Bambino turned down the offer of Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the Yanks, to manage the Newark Bears, a Yankee farm.

Most of the other present major league pilots also have contracts for next year, which bodes none too well for the Bambino's managerial aspirations so far as the coming season is concerned.

Ruth played in 125 games this season, but retired from many of those games before they were over. His legs, small compared to his bulk, have caused him trouble for several seasons. He smacked out 22 home runs during the season and ended with an unofficial batting average of .288.

Terry Accepts 'All the Blame'

'Guessed Wrong at Times,' Cause of Giants' Fall.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Oct. 8 (AP).—Bill Terry today accepted "all the blame" for the failure of his New York Giants to win the National League pennant.

After slipping into town unnoticed over the week-end, and declining to be interviewed by local sports writers, Terry today telephoned an old friend among the sports editors to say:

"Just as I told my ball players—if we had won, I'd have gotten a lion's share of the credit. But, now that we've lost, I'm taking all the blame.

"I guessed wrong, and at times used the wrong pitchers. All in all, it was my fault and there are no alibis."

After his Giants won the world championship last year, Terry was welcomed to Memphis with parades, public speakings and banquets.

Paul, Assistant to Dizzy the Great, Also 'Fogs' 'Em Across

By Paul Gallico.

DETROIT, Oct. 8.—This is the story of a shadow: say, you know Dizzy Dean, don't you? Here, shake hands with Dizzy Dean, the great pitcher. Diz, this is Joe Fan; shake; yes sir, that's the great Diz: oh, yes, excuse me. This is Paul, the kid brother. Paul's a pretty good pitcher too. Well, now, Diz——.

Say, that Diz is a card—won 30 games this year and funny as they make 'em. Hear him telling the bat boy to have four pounds of ice ready to cool off the home plate after he got through burning 'em over in the clinching game against Cincinnati, and the boy shows up with the ice? Haw, haw, I guess that was a pretty good one. You can't beat that Dizzy, can you? Who? That quiet feller over there? Oh, that's just his much-younger brother, Paul. He don't say much. Quiet kid. Never opens his yap. Prétty fair pitcher, to. Say, ya ever hear the one about Dizzy down in Florida——?

"Can He Fog 'Em?"

It's Diz this and Diz that: Can that Diz fog 'em in! Boy, when that Diz bears down! Listen to Diz go over and burn 'em up in the enemy dugout; haw, haw, haw, that Dizzy! Which one did you say was Paul? What, that feller over there in the corner? Ain't like Diz, is he? Just kinda sits around and says nothing, eh, kinda like Diz's shadow? Well, well, well; hey, Diz, how about a autograph?

But it was the shadow who turned in the greatest performance of pitching to date, the most stout-hearted, the most thrilling. Not Diz, but Paul. Sure the shadow! Tied the series again by beating the victory-hungry Tigers, 4 to 3, here today. Survived every bad break that could ever happen to a kid firing up the ball in the crucial game for his team. Knocked in the winning run himself. Beat out bad decisions, bad hops, bad errors. Conquered nerves, crowd and ill-fortune. Pitched his heart out. Won his second World Series game in four days. Beat the great Schoolboy Rowe, too. Not Diz, but Paul, the shadow! The youngster they say throws just like his great brother. First year up in the majors. What do you know about Paul? Oh, nothing much, he's just a quiet, willing kid. Now, if you want to hear about Diz——.

Used to Be Shortstop.

Paul used to be a shortstop. He played short around with the kids in Oklahoma and Arkansas. He was playing shortstop once for the Spaulding (Okla.) High School team and the pitcher went wild. The coach told Paul to get in the box and pitch. That was his last game at shortstop. He used to pitch overarm. One fall Diz came back to Holdenville from a year in the minors. He got Paul out back of the barn and they took turns, one with the pitcher's, the other with the catcher's mitt. Diz started the kid brother throwing side-arm the way he pitches. Paul said, "I've throwed side-arm ever since Found I could pitch best that way, just the same like Diz. Suits my build."

They say of Dizzy that he has ice water in his veins. Paul has liquid air in his and that's a lot colder. Nothing excites him. He seems immunized to the powerful toxins of despair. He has the miraculous ability of closing the

Two Jockeys Are Painfully Injured as Three of Six Jumpers Lose Riders at Laurel

Sims Suffers Broken Leg In Fall

Teakwood Wins Event; Feature to Widener's Chicstraw.

By Walter Haight.

THE Tuscarora Purse and the usual Monday steeplechase provided the high points of yesterday's eight-race program at nearby Laurel. The Tuscarora, the featured event, over the mile and a sixteenth course, resulted in a neck victory for George D. Widener's Chicstraw and the steeplechase resulted in a series of thrills for the crowd and an afternoon's work for the doctors.

Luck was with the Widener Stable, because Azucar was pocketed on the rail and did not get clear racing room until straightened out in the stretch. However, luck was not with three of the six jockeys who rode their steeds postward for the 2-mile jumping contest. Two were painfully injured and a third was thrown unhurt before the event was completed.

Taken to Hospital.

Jockey M. Sims went flying off Rozell at the third fence. N. Coe fell from Springdale at the seventh jump and M. Mergler was sent sprawling out of Capstan's saddle at the eleventh obstacle. Mergler jumped to his feet apparently little the worse for his accident, but Sims and Mergler were rushed to the hsopital.

Attendants said last night that Sims had broken his right leg above the knee and Coe was thought to be suffering from internal injuries. Neither is said to be in dangerous condition, however, all of which is good news for, from the pressbox, it appeared that all the king's horses and all the king's men couldn't put them together again.

Teakwood Winner.

The winner was Teakwood, the property of H. B. Langdon and the same horse that paid a $221.60 mutuel last week. Teakwood was a mere $9 yesterday. Under the handling of the apprentice, F. McKay, the 7-year-old gelding took the purse by a half-length from Spinach, with Aries at third. Teakwood was the first double winner of the meeting.

To return to the feature, Chicstraw and Azucar drew the bulk of the betting in the field of four, with the latter installed a slight favorite. Don Meade took Chicstraw away winging and soon had command. On the swing for the stretch, Chicstraw disposed of Dark Hope rather easily but had to be ridden out to stave off the stretch bid of Azucar. Jockey Arcaro, on Azucar, was forced to jam his mount between Dark Hope and Chicstraw to get a clear path to the wire.

Romney High Defeated.

Romney, W. Va., Oct. 8 (Spl.).—Scoring two touchdowns in the second quarter, another in the third, and a fourth in the closing session, Keyser High gridders defeated the Romney High eleven, 26 to 0, here to remain in the ranks of unbeaten teams.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ZAY, $13.80, $6.80, $3.70; DIVERTING, $3.10, $2.40; SASTAR, $3.00.

ZAY sprinted into an easy lead directly after the start, went along strongly while in command, and was never menaced thereafter. DIVERTING, as usual slow to break, secured racing room on the inside to enter a forward position, responded willingly while making up ground, and then finished courageously. SASTAR, in closest attendance of the pacemaker until reaching the home stretch, failed to rally, although continuing gamely after making a wide turn. PHARAHAWK went forwardly, but failed to improve her position when urged. GIFTED LADY had no mishaps. HARD CHASE was done after the opening furlong.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800. For 2-year-old fillies; maidens. Start good for all but Good Cheer. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:06. Off at 2:06. Winner, Shandon Farm's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SISOWEN, $10.60, $6.40, $5.20; COUNTESS ANN, $5.20, $4.10; BELLE OF DIXIE, $7.30.

SISOWEN, rated close to SAINT CLEO while full of run, took command when reaching the home stretch, moved clear, and had enough in reserve to stall off COUNTESS ANN. Latter, outrun in the first half-mile after being swiftly, came to the outside for the final drive and closed gamely. BELLE OF DIXIE worked her way up steadily in the early racing, then came resolutely nearing the end. GORON went prominently from the beginning. SAINT CLEO, taken under slight reserve while in command, flattened out when put to a drive in the last quarter-mile. BUY STRAIGHT was done after the first half-mile. WATCH IN went wide. GOOD CHEER, broke poorly.

THIRD RACE—About 2 miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming; steeplechase. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving. Place, same. Went to post at 2:36. Off at 2:36½. Winner, H. B. Langdon's b. g. (7), by Neversword—Almond Eyes. Trained by H. G. Bedwell. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100. Time, 4:13 (14 jumps).

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TEAKWOOD, $9.00, $4.50, $4.00; SPINACH, $3.20, $3.20; ARIES, $4.10.

TEAKWOOD, restrained for the first turn of the field while holding a forward position, drew on even terms with ARIES at the twelfth fence, responded for the final drive and, coming on the inside of SPINACH at the last fence, outstayed the latter on the flat when the finish came. SPINACH fenced nicely while racing reserved for a mile, took command with a rush after the twelfth fence, but tired suddenly after taking the last jump. ARIES, taken back after six furlongs, made a strong bid going to the twelfth jump, but was not good enough thereafter. CAPSTAN lost his rider at the eleventh fence. SPRINGDALE ROSE lost rider at the seventh and ROZELL at the second.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward foaled in Maryland. Start good. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 3:06. Off at 3:12. Winner, A. G. Vanderbilt's ch. g. (3), by Trojan—Blazing Ember. Trained by J. H. Stotler. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:23 1-5, 0:47 4-5, 1:13 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DREEL, $3.10, $2.50, $2.30; TOYTIME, $4.90, $3.30; CAMPAGNA, $3.90.

DREEL raced BALLY BAY into quick submission, was steadied in front until reaching the home stretch, then held TOYTIME safe after being shaken up during the closing furlong. TOYTIME worked her way up on the outside to enter contention with a rush approaching the home stretch but faltered after a bold challenge at the final furlong pole CAMPAGNA closed gamely in the last half-mile to pass tiring horses. CANDESCENT, a keen factor in the opening stages, tired when hard ridden. ADVOCATE JUNIOR was held safe after an early display of speed. BALLY BAY stopped badly under his weight.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:38. Off at 3:44. Winner, Audley Farm's b. f. *Field.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DANCING DOLL, $10.60, $4.90, $3.40; JIM JOHN, $3.90, $3.10; BACK FENCE, $3.60.

DANCING DOLL, unruly and delaying the start, broke in the first flight to take command in the opening furlong, drew clear midway of the turn, and then was steadied to withstand JIM JOHN. Latter went to the outside when entering a contending position, closed with good courage, but could not seriously menace the winner. BACK FENCE worked his way into a prominent position, but could not make up any ground in the final drive. TWOADAY, allowed to drop out of contention while in tight quarters in the opening furlong, was unable to threaten after regaining his stride. STAR CHASE finished wide, but closed stoutly. BOSTON BROOK and OUR MAE were used up forcing the pace. The others were outrun.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000. The Tuscarora. For 3-year-olds and upward which have not won $900 since April 1. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 4:12½. Off at 4:13. Winner, George D. Widener's b. or br. c. (3), by Chicle—Last Straw. Trained by W. F. Mulholland. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:44 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHICSTRAW, $4.60, $2.50, out; AZUCAR, $2.60, out; DARK HOPE, out.

CHICSTRAW was shaken up and placed to intermittent punishment when challenged at the final turn, held on courageously thereafter under nice handling, and outstayed AZUCAR. Latter moved up on inside of the leader approaching the final curve, but DARK HOPE, when coming between the latter and CHICSTRAW at the stretch turn, then closed with good energy. DARK HOPE offered stiff contention until reaching the home stretch, where he was bumped and forced out. REBEL YELL was done after six furlongs.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:42. Off at 4:42. Winner, H. P. Metcalf's b. g. (4), by Abbot's Nymph—Queen Menilek. Trained by M. Smart. Value to winner, $435; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $15. Time, 1:47 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PRINCE ABBOT, $4.70, $3.30, $2.60; JUSTA TEACHER, $8.00, $5.20; ROCK COVENTRY, $3.30.

PRINCE ABBOT went to the outside to move into a contending position, wore JUSTA TEACHER down after a brief issue, then came out smartly in the closing furlong. JUSTA TEACHER saved ground, but was unable to match the winner's rush when challenged. ROCK COVENTRY went well placed in the early racing, but failed to hold pressure. ACCENT began tiring after six furlongs. SHENVALEE was outrun throughout. SOLACE stopped badly.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward which have not won since September 14. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:12. Off at 5:13. Winner, S. W. Labon's b. f. (3), by Mad Hatter—Ruth Law. Trained by C. Sutphin. Value to winner, $625; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:47 3-5.

LAWLESS LADY disposed of the leaders at the stretch turn, then drew out into an easy lead. JUST CAP, on the inside of the leaders in the early stages, found racing room and held on gamely. APPOMATTOX was used up forcing the early pace and had nothing left when the real test came. INFIDEE circled her field in the last half-mile and was gaining slowly nearing the finish. REPEAL went into a clear lead early. He tired after going six furlongs.

P. Dean Bests Rowe to Win, 4-3, As Cardinals Again Even Series

seventh inning by lashing out the hit that won the ball game. He whacked a solid single into right field to drive across the plate little Leo Durocher, ordinarily a light hitter, who had surprised the assembly by doubling against the right center field fence with one out.

Daffy Outpitches Rowe.

Thus, with arm and bat did Dean harrass the Tigers, and he outpitched this city's hero, Rowe, by a far wider margin than the 4-to-3 score indicates. His second triumph of the series saw young Dean again permit the Tigers only seven hits, while his Cardinal mates banged Rowe's delivery for ten safe blows.

While the Cards were making free with Rowe's pitching, driving across their four runs with solid thumps, the Tigers were figuratively clawing Dean for runs that kept them in the running. Two of their three tallies were unearned. Only one of their seven hits was a healthy sock to the outfield, Hank Greenberg's single that tied the score in the sixth inning.

For five innings, young Dean, with a long and deliberate wind-up strongly resembling the action of his elder brother, held the Tigers to two hits, Mickey Cochrane, a gallant figure in the Tigers' defeat, was the only one among them who could solve Dean's delivery, and their first three hits he made himself. These three hits by Cochrane were all infield blows that he beat out despite painful leg injuries he was nursing. Five of the Tigers' blows were of the infield variety. The slender one-run lead he himself had established for the Cardinals, young Dean nursed tenderly through the thrilling seventh, eighth and ninth innings.

The Tigers made serious gestures toward tying the score in the seventh when Pete Fox led off with a double that fell safely in the high wind, evading the eager gloves of Medwick, Durocher and Orsatti. Rowe's sacrifice put Fox on third with one out, but Durocher quelled the threat for Dean when he grabbed White's sharp grounder and whirled it back to the plate where Delancey tagged Fox trying to score.

The Detroit hitters again menaced Daffy in the eighth when with one out Charley Gehringer's grounder to Frankie Frisch bounded high in the air, forcing Frisch to move far back to make the catch, and Gehringer beat the throw for a single.

Goose Goslin moved Gehringer to third with a short single to right that Rothrock played none too perfectly, and now the winning run was on first with only one out.

Issue Up to Dean.

The issue was now squarely up to Dean. He pitched two balls to Rogell who then lifted a high fly to center field that the wind drove back toward the diamond. Center Fielder Ernie Orsatti camped under the ball after a long sprint and for a moment the tying run appeared to be a race between Gehringer's legs and Orsatti's arm.

But Del Baker, third base coach of the Tigers, refused to permit Gehringer to race for home. Baseball will never know if Gehringer could have beaten Orsatti's throw to the plate. It was swift and almost true as Catcher Bill Delancey gathered it in, but the Tigers had refused to take the chance.

Dean found himself still menaced by Greenberg at the plate. The Tiger slugger had driven in the tying run in the sixth, the best blow off a Detroit bat during the game. Big Hank swung at a wide curve and missed. Then he popped a high foul that twisted in the air over the right-field boxes. Here First Baseman Jimmy Collins gave Dean the support he so richly deserved. Galloping to within two feet of the stands, he reached backward over his head to snare the ball and end the rally.

In the ninth inning the young St. Louis hurler faced the final obstacles in his path to victory. To contend with were Marvin Owen, Pete Fox and Schoolboy Rowe. Owen he subdued on a pop foul to Collins. Fox he disposed of on a fly to Orsatti. Now remained only Rowe, his pitching rival. The Tigers needed one run. Rowe was a home-run hitter. Mickey Cochrane disdained to use a pinch-hitter and the rival pitchers were face to face.

The Cardinal infield clustered about Dean, with Frisch giving the orders. There was a debate as to tactics. Frisch voted down the suggestion that Dean feed Rowe slow curves that would be difficult to sock for homers. He ordered speedball pitching by Dean.

Delancey motioned the Cardinal outfielders to move to more distant territory. The first pitch to Rowe was Dean's fastest of the day, but a wild pitch over the head of both batter and catcher. The next, Rowe socked, a vicious drive into dead center, the longest blow of the ball game. But Ernie Orsatti had gauged his position well. Backing up a dozen steps he made the catch that sent the series into a seventh game. Rowe had made a gallant, but futile bid.

For the fifth time in the series, the Cardinals were the first to score, reaching Rowe for a run in the first inning. With one out Rothrock stretched his hit to right field to a double when Fox loafed on the play. Frisch lined out to Owen, but Ducky Medwick put the Cards in front with a solid liner to left that scored Rothrock.

With two out in the third inning, Jo-Jo White, almost single handed, tied the score for the Tigers after drawing a base on balls. The base running star of the series attempted to steal second only to find the ball there ahead of him, but he barged into Frankie Frisch with such force that Frisch dropped the ball. As Frisch lay prone, the ball between second base and the pitcher's box with Paul Dean making no motions to field it, White arose and galloped safely to third without drawing a play.

Here Mickey Cochrane drilled a grounder toward right that Collins could only knock down. It was a race between Cochrane and Paul Dean to the bag and Umpire Geisel gave the decision to Cochrane on a close play as White scored the tying run.

It was not until the fifth that the Cards broke the 1-1 tie. Leo Durocher, who was to be the batting star of the day with three hits, beat out a grounder to Gehringer and was promptly advanced by Dean's sacrifice.

Along came the irrepressible Pepper Martin to drive Durocher home with a single past Rogell that Goslin grabbed for a play at the plate. When the Goose's throw bounded wildly past Cochrane, Martin continued on to third and scored as Rothrock's grounder to Rogell took a high bounce that delayed Rogell's throw to the plate. It was the lone lucky break of the game for the Cards.

Tigers Even Score.

The Tigers caught up with this 3-1 lead in the sixth amid thunderous cheers. Jo-Jo White launched the inning by walking and Cochrane then got his third straight infield hit, a vicious grounder that Collins could only knock into foul territory as White galloped to third. Here Dean committed a lapse that bore all the earmarks of the turning point of the game.

He had worked the count to 3 and 2 on the dangerous Gehringer and was rewarded when the Tiger second baseman bounced an easy grounder back into the box. It was an absurdly simple play for Dean, but he muffed it. The ball rolled between his legs, White scored from third, Cochrane moved to second and Gehringer was on first with none out, the Tigers only one run behind.

Then Bill Delancey made a daring, but successful play to ease the tension. Goslin dumped a sacrifice bunt in front of the plate. Delancy heaved it to third in an effort to cut off Cochrane with the tying run. Martin took the ball as the ailing Mickey crashed into the bag, and Umpire Brick Owens called him safe, a decision that was greeted with a salvo of boos.

But Dean was not yet out of his predicament, with only one out and both the tying and winning runs on base. Bill Rogell provided the second out, a long fly to Orsatti that permitted Gehringer to go to third. Then Greenberg batted his way into the hearts of the 44,500, excluding Cardinal supporters, by driving a sharp single to deep left field scoring Gehringer with the tying tally and moving Rogell to second with the potential winning run.

The Tiger threat to take the lead ended with a superb play by little Durocher who crossed in front of Martin to take Owen's sharply hit grounder and throw him out at first base by half a step. In the seventh Durocher's double and Dean's single provided the Cards with the 1-run lead that Daffy nourished so tenderly and capably through those last three throbbing innings when each pitched ball could be translated into victory or defeat for either club.

the plate which got away from Cochrane, and scored on Rothrock's high bounder to Rogell. Martin was nearly home when Rogell caught the ball and there was no chance to make a play at the plate.

The score was tied again in the sixth, 3-3, when the Tigers made two runs. White drew a walk, and dashed to third when Cochrane slashed a single off Collins' glove, his third straight hit of the game. Gehringer sent an easy roller straight at Paul Dean, who let the ball go between his legs, White scoring and Cochrane holding second.

Goslin tapped in front of the plate, and Delancey threw to Martin, retiring Cochrane on a close play. Rogell flied to Orsatti and Gehringer moved to third after the catch. Greenberg then singled to left, scoring Gehringer with the tying run. Durocher retired the side with a fast play on Owen's grounder.

The Cards went back into the lead in the seventh. With one out, Durocher doubled to right center and scored on Paul Dean's single to right. That proved the winning run, but the Cards had to fight furiously to make it stand up through a hair-raising finish.

Pete Fox started the Tigers' seventh with a double to left center at the feet of Medwick, Orsatti and Durocher, none of whom could quite reach the ball. Rowe sacrificed him to third. Frisch lined out to Durocher, in close, who whipped the ball to Delancey and Fox was out. White was out attempting to steal second.

Stands Off Charge.

Hampden-Sidney's Second Half Attack Routs American U. Eleven by 33-0 Margin

Eagles Falter After Early Stands

60-Yard Drive Opens Scoring; Bernier in Role of Hero.

A SMALL but fighting American U. eleven went down to a devastating 33-0 defeat before Hampden-Sydney yesterday afternoon on their home field. It was the opening game of the season for the Eagles.

Coach Walter Young's charges, after outplaying their opponents during the first half, cracked wide open after the intermission before a flood of Hampden-Sydney touchdown drives.

The Tigers made their first score in the third period. A 60-yard drive culminated in a touchdown, with Charles Dotson going over from the 5-yard line to make the first of the five touchdowns scored during the second half. Dotson place-kicked the extra point.

Pass Leads to Second.

An intercepted pass paved the way for the second score. Staff Cassell called for a pass on his own 10-yard line and Bernier intercepted for Hampden-Sydney. Dotson scored after four attempts at the line. Dotson place-kicked the point.

Hampden-Sydney continued its march, in the final period, scoring three more touchdowns. After an exchange of kicks the Tigers made their third score when Formwalt snared Bernier's pass. Dotson failed to place-kick the extra point.

A 60-yard drive immediately after the kick-off gave Hampden-Sydney its fourth touchdown, with Dotson carrying the ball over from the 3-yard stripe.

Threat Is Halted.

The Eagles tried vainly to score in the final period but an interception by Harris of the Tigers stopped the threat. Hampden-Sydney made its final touchdown immediately afterward, with Harris cracking right tackle after a 40-yard drive down the field. Hyde rushed the extra point.

The Eagles lost a chance to score in the first half when a forward-passing attack carried them to the 1-yard line. Cassell called for a pass on the first play and the entire forward wall of the visitors crashed through and threw him for a loss. Three futile line plunges and Hampden-Sydney kicked out of danger and was never threatened again.

Coach Shifts Four Players At C. U.

Arnold, Mulligan, Oliver and Gearty to Start Against Holy Cross.

DR. ARTHUR J. BERGMAN, Catholic University pigskin specialist yesterday performed one of the greatest operations undertaken during his tour of duty at the Brookland school. Dr. Bergman lifted his football team's face and when finished the Cards bore a faint—very faint resemblance to the team that started against LaSalle Saturday.

The good doctor, it seems, was not entirely pleased or satisfied with the way his lads performed and decided on a change of scenery for certain ones as a cure. So four menw ill view the next game from a two-foot elevation commonly referred to as the bench.

Bergman gave Lajousky's job to Dick Arnold, McGann's to George Mulligan, Makofske's to Tom Oliver, and Tom Gearty's to Babe Gearty. The doctor still walks around, scalpel in hand, ready for more lifting if need be, and judging from Holy Cross' work it may be necessary.

Material Is Plentiful.

Holy Cross, scouted by George Vlk, who is authority for this report, has 75 real football players. So well balanced are the first three teams that Ed Anderson simply refers to them as Team A, Team Plus and Team Double A Plus. Critics touting the Crusaders for a National championship are not escaped inmates from a nut house, Vlk reports.

So optimistic is Bergmn after listening to loquacious George he has shifted plans for Saturday's battle. Instead of merely trying to beat the Cross, Bergman has decided to try and hold it to a low score.

Gus Augusterfer, regulation quarter back, will be back at his post Saturday after spending 10 days on the sidelines because of injuries. Karpowich's sprained wrist and a charley horse belonging to Tom Gearty are the only other casualties.

Bergman is more than pleased with Yanchulis' work at center. The big fellow played a bang-up defensive game and seems to have the makings o a grade A snapperback.

As Hampden-Sydney Spoiled American U.'s Grid Debut

The Post cameraman supplies ample proof of Hampden-Sydney's superiority over American U. in their game yesterday. The Tigers won, 33-0, spoiling th e Eagles' coming-out party. Battle Looming Over Weekly Bouts Here

Ahearn Asks More Dates; Turner Planning Fight to the Finish.

WAR clouds are gathering ominously over local Fistiana, with imminent renewal of the "eternal triangle" between Goldie Ahearn, the Boxing Commission and Joe Turner presaging open hostilities within the week, it was learned yesterday.

Rumblings of the impending outbreak came as Ahearn, matchmaker for the Riding and Hunt Club, requested the commission to return his club to the "show-a-week" status it enjoyed last spring, and Turner indicated he would battle vigorously against any effort to change the existing arrangements.

Prior to a promotorial truce, effected last July, the Hunt Club was operating every Monday, instead of on alternate weeks with Turner, who then was authorized to stage shows at Griffith Stadium every Thursday or Friday.

Would Begin October 22.

Should the commission accede to Ahearn's request, the Hunt Club will begin staging weekly cards on October 22 and Turner will be authorized to hold shows at the Auditorium once a week—on Thursdays or Fridays.

Turner said last night he did not believe the commission would sanction a return to the old arrangement, but that he was prepared to take steps to fight to retain the present conditions, if necessary.

"Our shows have paid the freight on local boxing," Turner stated, "and I do not believe the commission will revert to the old arrangement of two promoters working here each week. If they do, we shall have to battle about the matter."

Ahearn's request was made because of the difficulty of meeting overhead expenses in a small arena running only twice a month, he said.

Cites Small Profit.

"My place, holding only 2,500 people at the very utmost, can make only a small profit on each show," he said. "To meet overhead, I must run every week. Turner, with his greater capacity at the Auditorium, can clear enough on one show to more than meet his expenses for a month. He can book National attractions, but I must build up local cards, and to do this I must keep firing fast and often."

The truce between promoters, negotiated by the commission last July, was entered into by Turner, Ahearn and Charley Swann, representing the now defunct American Legion Arena, to avoid an overdose of fisticuffing which seemed to be strangling the sport.

At the time it was announced the agreement was to be in force only during the summer, and that other arrangements would be made this winter. The commission will confer on the matter today, and may have a definite answer for Ahearn by tonight.

Missouri Offers Aid In Fight on Coal Code

Jefferson City, Mo., Oct. 8 (AP).—Roy McKittrick, State attorney general, announced today he had offered the legal assistance of his department to Missouri coal dealers who are charged with selling at less than NRA code prices.

McKittrick said dealers must comply with coal labor provisions, however.

gates of his imagination upon the past as each second slides into eternity. The future will be along soon enough. He plays only the man at the plate. Disaster leaves no after-taste with such a fellow. Else how could he survive twice having had the score tied on him when all along he pitched shutout ball and gave only two true hits? This I thought was the greatest feat of all, a magnificent demonstration of the stubborn will to win.

Gets an Early Lead.

His team gave him a run in the first and it was truly all he asked for. Then, with two out in the third, he walked White, and when White tried to steal second Delancey had him out by 4 feet. But Frisch dropped the ball and the fleeing White got up and ran on to third on the error. Then, after two strikes, Cochrane fouled off four balls, on any one of which he could have struck out or popped up. Finally Mickey sent a grounder to Collins. Paul went over to take the toss for the put-out, seemed to have made it by a step, but Umpire Geisel called Cochrane safe at first and so White scored. Paul got Gehringer on a fly to left then, and came back and got the next six men in order.

His team got him two solid runs in the fifth, and again disaster overtook him. In the sixth, he again walked White, and Cochrane made his third straight scratch hit, a ball that Collins cuffed into the coach's box, enabling White to reach third. Gehringer hit an easy ball to Paul, and this time with an easy play at home it was Dean who made the error, letting the ball roll between his legs while White scored and Mickey went to second.

The Shadow Keeps On.

Then Goslin bunted and forced Cochrane at third, Delancy making a fine throw, and after Rogell flied out to Orsatti, Gehringer made third. Then Paul gave his first real hit, a single to left by Greenberg, and Gehringer came in, again tying the score.

But the shadow of the great Diz just went on pitching with no particular concern. He now had self-condemnation to battle as well as wrath against Fate. But when he batted behind Durocher's double in the seventh he slashed out the sharp single that sent in the winning run. And when in the eighth he had Gehringer on third and Goslin on first with one out, due to singles, he "fogged her over" as sweetly as ever did Dizzy and got Rogell on a long fly and Greenberg on a high foul. And that is the story of the shadow that was. Did I ever tell you the one about Diz and——? No, and I'm not going to, either.

Cochrane Overlooked P. Dean In Bragging About Schoolboy

DETROIT, Oct. 8 (AP).—Yesterday it was a case of too many Bridges for the Deans; today the Dean was too much for the Schoolboy. En route from St. Louis to Detroit last night, Mickey Cochrane said the Tigers had the Cardinals in the dog house. The trouble was the dog house door was open.

With a seventh game, the total gross receipts are a cinch to soar over the million dollar mark. The six-game receipts totaled $893,278. The Cardinal and Tiger owners can enjoy a nice winter, too. Their individual cuts so far total $114,900.18.

Although the feverish Detroit fans howled for a Tiger victory, they cheered mightily the defensive exploits of the Cards and Tigers alike. The fielding gems of the game were Martin's great stop of Goslin's smash to rob him of a hit in the first; Goslin's spectacular running catch of Delancey's drive in the same inning; Orsatti's running catch of Rowe's cannon-ball liner in the third, and Collins' spectacular catch of Greenberg's foul near the right-field boxes.

Orsatti got bunged up some more today, but made seven putouts—one short of the world series record for one game. The record was made in 1905 by Mike Donlin and tied in 1919 by Eddie Roush.

Medwick got two more hits today to run his series total to 10. He needs three more to smash the record held by Joe Jackson, Buck Herzog and Sam Rice.

Jo Jo White is the walkingest man in the show. He has had eight passes since the series opened.

Both the Cards and Tigers now have come close to losing their stars. Rogell almost fractured Dizzy's skull with his bullet relay at St. Louis Saturday; today, Cochrane was spiked. Almost everyone at first feared Mickey's leg had been broken.

Rowe received a letter from a fan, who described a great pitching innovation—how to throw an "E" ball. It would be okay of Rowe didn't use his "G" string.

Frankie Frisch said if Delancey was fined for his run-in with Umpire Brick Owens that he (Frisch) would gladly pay the fine. "And the American League has never even heard me swear," grinned Frankie.

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—The State Boxing Commission will be asked tomorrow to reverse the decision to reverse the decision which gave Steve Hamas, former Pennsylvania Collegian, a victory over Art Lasky of Minneapolis in their 10-round heavyweight fight at Madison Square Garden Friday night.

Maurice Lasky, Manager of Art, said tonight he will appear before the commission and formally request a reversal on the grounds that referee Billy Kavanaugh, who awarded the fight to Hamas when the rules as respects back-hand the judges disagreed, misinterpreted

5 16-Foot Sloops Race on Potomac

Wind of 25 Miles Swamps 1 Entry; Peter Pan Wins.

Yacht racing was introduced to Washington yesterday when five 16-foot sloops competed over a triangular course off Hains Point. One of the entries was swamped by the rough water. A wind of 25 miles per hour, northwest, prevailed for the first race and 15 miles per hour for the second.

The Peter Pan, sailed by Grover Fransworth, of Old Dominion, won the first race in 33 minutes with the Louise, sailed by Skipper Mitchell, of Flood Gate Club, second, 2½ minutes behind. Louise won the second race, however, with the Peter Pan trailing 1 second behind. The time for the winner was 35:31 and the runner-up, 35.30.

Work for Navy Is Begun by Maryland

Terps Will Rely on Speed and Deception in Tilt at Annapolis.

MARYLAND'S football men went back on the rock pile yesterday for another week of hard labor in preparation for Saturday's big game with Navy at Annapolis.

Safely through the Washington and Lee game with nothing more serious than njured feelings, the Terps look to the Navy battle as the golden opportunity to regain whatever prestige they lost to the Generals. Maryland whipped the Middies, 6—0, three years ago at Griffith Stadium in their last meeting and on paper it has a good chance of repeating.

Assistant Coach Roy Mackert, who scouted the Tars against Virginia, handed over a list of marked men to Jack Faber and Maryland's defense will be constructed especially for the purpose of stopping these men. "Buz" Borries, naturally, is No. 1, with Bill Clarke, Jack Mini and Georgie Whitmyre next in line.

Kicking Paved Way.

Bories displayed his usual brilliant broken-field running against Virginia, while it was Clarke's consistently good kicking that drove the Cavaliers into their own territory and paved the way for Navy's first two touchdowns. In Mini Coach Tom Hamilton has a prospective All-American. Mini is death on passes and a fine defensive wingman. Whitmyre has all the attributes of an outstanding back. He never failed to gain in Saturday's game.

Maryland will depend on speed and deception to ba gthe verdict. In Al Sothoron, Earl Widmyer and Coleman eHadley, it has three of the finest backs to sport the Black and Gold in recent years. Sothoron, though inexperienced, is making rapid strides and will make a better player than Widmyer if he continues at his present pace.

Play-by-Play

error. Goslin bunted to DeLancey, whose snap throw to Martin forced Cochrane at third. It was a close decision and Cochrane protested violently while the crowd booed. Rogell flied deep to Orsatti and Gehringer ran to third after the catch. Greenberg hit sharply to left for a single, scoring Gehringer with the tying run and sending Goslin to second. Owen grounded out, Durocher to Collins. Two runs, two hits, one error, two left.

SEVENTH INNING, CARDINALS—Orsatti lifted a fly to Goslin along the foul line. Durocher drove a long hit to the bleacher fence in right center for a double. Dean singled sharply past Greenberg and Durocher scored. Dean made no attempt to advance on the throw-in. Martin filed to Fox, the bat flying from Pepper's hands toward the pitcher's box. Rothrock grounded out, Owen to Greenberg. One run, two hits, no errors, one left.

SEVENTH INNING, TIGERS— Fox dropped a pop fly in short left center for a two-base hit. Durocher, Medwick and Orsatti all ran for the ball, but each hesitated long enough for it to drop safely. Rowe bunted along the first-base line and was thrown out, Delancey to Frisch, as Fox went to third on the sacrifice. White grounded to Durocher and Fox was thrown out at the plate, Durocher to Delancey, as White reached first. Cochrane up. White was thrown out trying to steal, DeLancey to Frisch. No runs, one hit, no errors, none left.

EIGHTH INNING, CARDINALS—Frisch grounded to Rogell and was tossed out at first. Medwick grounded out to Greenberg, who slid into the bag to make the putout. Collins popped to Owen along the foul line behind third base. No runs, no hits, no errors, none left.

EIGHTH INNING, TIGERS—Cochrane grounded out, Frisch to Collins. The Tiger manager slipped as he started to run and pulled up lame. Gehringer grounded to Frisch and was safe at first for a single on a close decision. Goslin hit to right center for a single, sending Gehringer to third. Rogell filed to Orsatti in short center. Gehringer making no attempt to run for the plate. Greenberg lifted a high foul that Collins caught with a sensational play near the lower boxes off the right-field line. No runs, two hits, no errors, two left.

NINTH INNING, CARDINALS—Delancey fanned, swinging. Orsatti bounced a single past Rogell into center field. Durocher smashed a single over second for his third hit, sending Orsatti to third and running to second himself on the throw-in. Orsatti was shaken up as he slid into third to beat White's throw. Dean bounced to Gehringer and Orsatti was called out at the plate, Gehringer to Cochrane. Durocher reached third and Dean got to first. Cochrane was knocked down as Orsatti charged to the plate and shaken up. Martin fanned, swinging. No runs, two hits, no errors, two left.

Grid Outlook

By Herbert W. Barker
(Associated Press Sports Writer).

IF FOOTBALL can produce another series of exciting upsets such as amazed a palpitating public last Saturday, the country's stadia won't be half large enough to hold the prospective customers.

However the experts may feel about such items as Notre Dame's defeat by Texas, Michigan's rout by Michigan State, Purdue's walloping by Rice, and the downfall of such Eastern standbys as Penn and Cornell, the fact remains that such surprises add tremendously to Mr. John H. Fan's interest.

There is plenty of dynamite, concealed and otherwise, in this week's slate which, by sections, lines up this way:

Middle West—Notre Dame and Purdue will try to assuage their injured feelings in a battle at South Bend. Chicago and Michigan, and Illinois and Ohio State are the Big Ten Conference pairings. Iowa, victor over Northwestern, tangles with Nebraska, beaten by Minnesota. Missouri and Iowa State open Big Six Conference competition, while the intersectional angle is stressed in the meetings of Detroit and Washington and Jefferson Friday night, and Michigan State and Carnegie Tech on Saturday. Vanderbilt tangles with the University of Cincinnati, badly beaten by Kentucky. Tulsa, victor over Kansas, plays Texas Christian.

East—Pitt's joust with Southern California tops the card, despite the Trojans' defeat by Washington State. Other intersectional duels involve Columbia and Virginia Military, Army and Drake, Navy and Maryland, Temple and Indiana, and West Virginia and Washington and Lee. Yale, beaten by Columbia, faces Penn, tripped by little Ursinus. Harvard faces Brown, while Cornell and Syracuse renew relations at Ithaca. Boston College and Fordham, Duquesne and Bucknell are the leading Friday pairings.

Far West—Stanford's tussle with North Western tops a program marked otherwise by conference games involving Oregon and Washington and Montana and U. C. L. A. Washington State, conqueror of Southern California, meets Gonzaga. California and Oregon State play warm-up rivals.

South—Duke will seek to avenge last year's costly defeat by Georgia Tech, while Kentucky plays Clemson and Georgia meets North Carolina in tests between representatives of the South's two major conferences. South Carolina and North Carolina State clash in the only Southern Conference tilt, while in the Southeastern the pairings include Alabama and Mississippi State, Louisiana State and Auburn, Florida and Tulane, and Tennessee and Mississippi.

Iowa's Colored Ace 'Best Yet,' Says Hanley

CHICAGO, Oct. 8 (AP).—From now on, Oze Simmons, Iowa's sophomore colored half back, will be the standard for comparison in discussing running backs—at least in Dick Hanley's book.

Hanley, Northwestern's football coach, should know after what he saw last Saturday as Simmons, 170 pounds of jack-rabbit speed and trip-hammer power, led Iowa to its 20-to-7 triumph over the Wildcats.

"All I have to say about Simmons," Hanley said today, "is that he either is the greatest running back in my experience, or Northwestern has the worst bunch of tacklers in the world. And our tackling isn't so bad."

Then Hanley proceeded to elaborate.

Simmons Is "Top."

"I have seen and played against a lot of great backs," he said, "but Simmons is 'tops'—absolutely the best I've ever seen. At least he was Saturday.

"I played against Fritz Pollard (Brown University's All-America half back of 20 years ago) and he stood out as my all-time ball carrier—until Saturday. But, compared to Simmons, Fritz was just a real good half back.

"Our scouts warned us that Simmons was murder on returning kicks, and we drilled and planned all week to stop him. We actually surrounded him several times—and you saw what he did. He fielded the ball like an outfielder with those big hands, pivoted, circled and faded away from tacklers, outran them or fooled them with the most nearly perfect change of pace I ever saw.

Tackling Is Superb.

"Not only that, but he was almost as good banging into the line and his blocking and tackling were all anybody could ask. His blocking and tackling would still give him the edge over other great ball carriers, even if he didn't run as well as he does."

Simmons, who hails from Fort Worth, Tex., made his bow in Big Ten football Saturday by gaining more than 175 yards of Iowa's 233 from scrimmage, averaging nearly 7 yards for each time he carried the ball. He ran 48 yards from scrimmage for a touchdown, got loose for trips of 33 and 38 yards, along with returning three punts 30 or more yards.

"Simmons got swell blocking, but he got a lot of extra yardage on his own hook," Hanley said. "We lost, but it was a thrill to watch him. And boy, wouldn't I like to be there when Iowa and Minnesota come together! The scouts tell me Minnesota is absolutely terrific, and I know Iowa is."

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 126-J.

The progress, program and problems of the Fairfax County school system will be outlined by its leaders tonight at the monthly meeting of the Fairfax County Chamber of Commerce in the courthouse. A large number of county citizens are expected to attend.

To better acquaint the people of the county with school problems it has asked the leading school authorities to address tonight's meeting.

Supt. W. T. Woodson will tell of the school building program now under way and the financial problems confronting the school authorities in providing adequate accommodations for the rapidly increasing enrollments. He also will tell how various county organizations and citizens can assist in the program.

Mrs. Elsie A. Davis, county supervisor of rural elementary education, will explain the changes being made in the school curriculum and will advise the patrons how they can cooperate with the teachers in putting the new program into effect.

Principal Gordon E. Smith of the Lee-Jackson High School and president of the county teachers association, will outline the vocational guidance courses now offered in the high schools.

Oliver, jr., temporary chairman; Miss Randolph Richardson and Miss Warwick Rust, entertainment; Miss Ida Jones and Miss Jacquelin Pfalzgraf, refreshments; Miss Mary Walton McCandlish, Miss Mary Jane Head, Miss Randolph Richardson and Miss Warwick Rust, publicity.

Jimmie Walker And Aids Face Fraud Charges

Collusion With Friends in Land Sale Laid to Former Mayor.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 8 (AP).—Former Mayor James J. Walker, Arthur J. Hilly, corporation counsel for the city under Walker's administration; Warren Leslie, president of the Jamaica Water Supply Co., and Charles J. Nehrbas were accused of "fraud and collusion" in an affidavit filed today before Supreme Court Justice Edward Byrne, Brooklyn.

The charges were signed by City Controller Joseph D. McGoldrick in an action seeking to set aside an award of $2,569,909 granted to Leslie for a parcel of land on Bergen Beach, Brooklyn, made in 1930 by Supreme Court Justice James A. Dunne.

Corporation Counsel Paul Windels requested that the award be set aside because of alleged neglect of duty on the part of Hilly.

The affidavit charged that after Walker took office he signed a quitclaim to property at the beach in favor of the Lucmay Realty Corporation, which was controlled by Leslie, and that the quit-claim was given in consideration of $1,025,000 on February 1, 1926.

Three days later Leslie sold part of the land for $700,000 and the city took title four years later to the remainder after condemnation proceedings for $2,500,000, it was set forth.

The affidavit also stated that Hilly, as counsel for the city, and Nehrbas, Leslie's lawyer, made an agreement before the condemnation proceedings that the quit-claim would not be brought in as evidence during the action.

It was stated that the statute of limitations prevents an appeal and that Windel's only possible action must be to prove fraud and collusion or negligence.

"Silly," Says Walker.

London, Oct. 8 (AP).—Former Mayor James J. Walker, of New York today called "utterly silly" charges made against him in an affidavit filed in a Brooklyn suit that he participated in a plan to make large profits on land condemned by the city he governed. He added:

"The charge has not a scintilla of truth in it, and no responsibile person of sound mind, except a candidate for public office, would have made it."

We Want Too Much Too Quick, Says RFC Chairman

Chairman Jesse Jones, of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, believes that the Nation expects "too much too quick," the Associated Press reports. Discussing business conditions yesterday at his press conference, he said:

"There seems to have been a little overestimation of what the size of the fall business upturn would be.

"Business is good all over the country, but we expect too much too quick."

Man Injured in 3-Foot Fall.

A 3-foot fall when a ladder broke resulted yesterday in a compound fracture of the ankle and possible internal injuries for Albert Davidson, 49, of 925 Eighth street northwest. He was ascending the ladder to repair a radio aerial.

Gates' Letter to Von Steuben, Written in 1785, Found Here

Raymond Jeffords and Gen. Gates' letter.

Missive Discovered by Accident in Pile of Old Papers.

A letter, believed to have been written on December 6, 1785, by Gen. Horatio Gates, Continental officer who commanded an army in the Revolutionary War, to his old friend and comrade-in-arms, Gen. von Steuben, has been found by a Washingtonian.

Penned with red ink on heavy, now yellowed paper, the communication was discovered by Raymond Jeffords, 26, of the 600 block of E street northwest, while he was at work in a paper plant in the 3200 block of K street northwest.

In a pile of old papers Jeffords spied the crumpled missive, and because he collects antiques, he was curious. He salvaged the epistle and read the old English handwriting carefully.

Dated from Travellers' Rest, some long forgotten inn, the letter expresses regret that Gen. von Steuben, drill master for the ragged Continental armies in their first struggle against Great Britain, was contemplating a return to Germany.

Departure Opposed.

"The letter you were so obliging to write me of October 17, 1785, came to my hands only last night," wrote Gen. Gates with his quill.

"I am much interested at your determination to leave this country. The soldiers part with their Military Father when you go away from them.

"They never knew a regular system of discipline until you came and taught them.

"I will not believe but Congress thinks too highly of your merits to suffer you to depart from us. Peace seems to rest on too tender a foundation to admit your being a subject of any other country but the United States.

"When I was president of the Board of War, I very well remember your coming to Yorktown and being most honorably received by Congress.

"A committee was appointed to wait on you, and after that conferred with you and invited you to an elegant entertainment and every mark of distinction was shown to an officer of the front rank, in whose hands the inspection and discipline of the Army was placed."

Ink Dull in Spots.

The ink becomes dull and almost undecipherable in spots, but after referring to "adequate pecuniary compensations," Gen. Gates concluded his letter "with affectionate regards."

Jeffords and those to whom he has shown the letter are puzzled as to just where it was written, and where it lay through the past 149 years, before turning up in a bundle of old papers at a paper plant.

"When you touch the letter, you seem to be touching the past," said Jeffords yesterday.

"I suppose it was kept in an old box, hidden away for decades. It inspires a certain sort of awe."

Gen. von Steuben never returned to his native Magdeburg, Prussia, after the war. Instead, he passed the last years of his life in Steubenville, N. Y., where he died November 28, 1794. Congress presented him with a pension of $2,400 for life.

Roosevelt Plans Fewer Broadcasts

The voice of President Roosevelt, considered by broadcasting companies as the Nation's No. 1 radio star, will go on the air less frequently, if a policy disclosed yesterday at the White House is continued.

Certain of the President's advisers, it was said, are anxious that he restrict the number of speeches broadcast. They argue against his voice becoming too frequent, thus lessening the effect of his periodic "fireside chats" with the Nation.

Accordingly, Mr. Roosevelt's address to the American Bankers Association, meeting here late this month, will not go on the air, it was said. The speeches he is to deliver at Roanoke, Va., on October 19 and at Williamsburg, Va., the following day will be broadcast only regionally.

Wallace Adviser to Speak.

Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, will lecture Saturday night in the caucus room of the old House Office Building. His subject will be "Why the Government Should Control Production Up as Well as Down."

Another Victim Of Crash Dies

R.E. Pogue and Wife Bring Year's Auto Fatalities Here to 95.

Traffic deaths here for the year rose to 95 yesterday when Robert E. Pogue, 56, of Takoma Park, Md., second victim of Friday night's collision at Forty-first and Harrison streets northwest, died in Emergency Hospital.

His wife, Mrs. Charlotte Pogue, was also killed in the crash. Two girls, Misses Damaris Smith, 19, and Katherine Smith, 17, debutante daughters of Commander and Mrs. Hybrand Smith, of 3825 Livingston street northwest, are recovering in Emergency Hospital from severe injuries.

Miss Damaris Smith, police said, was driving the automobile which struck the Pogue car. Her sister, physicians said, was unconscious nearly 48 hours. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said an inquest would be held when the girls' condition permits their appearance.

Pogue was sales manager for the Thomas J. Fisher Co. His death was the third traffic fatality this month. Mrs. Pogue died en route to the hospital.

Community Chest Drive Completes Personnel

Charles Carroll Morgan, chairman of the special gifts unit for the coming Community Chest campaign, announced to the campaign chairman, H. L. Rust, jr., yesterday, that he has completed his entire personnel of team captains. Frederick P. H. Siddons is vice chairman of the unit and Ray F. McCarthy, secretary.

The team captains are Y. E. Booker, Frederick M. Bradley, Mrs. C. C. Glover, jr., Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, Richard W. Hynson, Samuel Kauffmann, Carl Kurtz, Alfred Lawson, Mrs. Sidney F. Taliaferro, James E. Colliflower and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring. This unit, as in previous years, will have charge of the solicitation of gifts of $500 and more.

Sharper Teeth For NRA, Plan Of President

Justice Department and Trade Commission to Figure in Drive.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Steps to obtain more effective compliance with code requirements probably will be emphasized in the reshaping of NRA now under way.

President Roosevelt discussed enforcement problems and the possibility of gradually lifting price-fixing and production limitation clauses yesterday at his first conference with Clay Williams, chairman, and other members of the recovery administrative board.

Indications were the President's next move in the reorganization program would be to establish a judicial division to tighten compliance machinery. The executive and legislative functions already have been cared for through appointment of the Williams board and the coordinating committee headed by Donald R. Richberg.

Compliance Held Weak.

Both the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission probably will figure in the new enforcement drive. Preliminary studies of the Williams board disclosed compliance has grown steadily worse until it has become the weakest phase of NRA.

Meanwhile, it became increasingly apparent that Mr. Roosevelt plans to devote greater attention to NRA, personally passing on all new policies. In the process he is expected to confer frequently with the Williams board.

Yesterday's conference was marked by consideration of the board's first written report, which was closely guarded. Compliance, however, was known to have been included.

Problems Just "Listed."

"We talked over what we've been doing," Williams explained on emerging from the White House.

"We told him the first week was devoted entirely to a survey of our problems. The discussion developed a few generalities as to what was included in these problems.

"There was just a listing of problems, or a statement of our recognition of these problems, rather than what we would do with them."

Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, retiring administrator, did not attend the White House parley. He has been consulted often, however, by Williams since the new board took command.

Ohio Selected for Study.

Williams later announced selection of Benedict Crowell, Cleveland engineer and former Assistant Secretary of War under Newton D. Baker, to study administration of NRA in Ohio. Any changes he recommends may be applied to other States.

Recent hints in official quarters of a retreat from price-fixing and production limitation provisions have drawn both favorable and unfriendly comment from business leaders. The upshot probably will be that such changes will be ordered slowly, industry by industry, rather than through any sweeping, all-inclusive proclamation.

The Williams board will receive a report shortly from a special committee named to study conditions in the cotton garment industry and recommend whether the President should alter his order for reduction of the work week from 40 to 36 hours without any cuts in pay.

Verdict of Yugoslavia Is Awaited by Italy

Rome, Oct. 8 (AP).—Whether Yugoslavia will cast her future lot with France or Germany was considered by Mussolini's government tonight as King Alexander of Yugoslavia prepare to leave for Paris for a three-day discussion with Premier Gaston Doumergue and Foreign Minister Louis Barthou.

Italy is following Alexander's visit with the same close attention she paid to recent developments indicating to the Italian mind that Yugoslavia is pulling away from France and looking to Germany.

Court May Call Secret Data on Sugar Quotas

Secretary Wallace Opposes Move to Bare Basis for Allotments.

Hawaiian sugar interests yesterday succeeded in reopening the question of whether or not Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace should be compelled to disclose the information pertaining to sugar data in the interdepartmental committee report, on which the allotments of sugar under the Jones-Costigan act were based.

Admission by Government counsel that Cuba was given a high allotment because it was the department's belief that to do so would help restore that country's purchasing power led to the making of a second demand for the data in the report and Justice Jennings Bailey indicated he would consider the situation and render his opinion today.

Government attorneys said that Cuba had once been one of the chief purchasers of agricultural implements in this country and had fallen far behind in its buying here because of collapse of world sugar marts. To permit a high allotment, it was said, would be to restore to Cuba its lost purchasing power.

Prior to this development, Department of Agriculture experts had tendered a trunk full of charts, graphs, and other data upon which they said they based their low allotment for Hawaii and their high allotment for Cuba. When it was developed that James Garfield, attorney for the Hawaiian petitioners, that the department was now advancing two reasons for cutting down Hawaiian and increasing Cuban allotments, Justice Bailey requested the inter-departmental report.

Secretary Wallace had blocked introduction of the report by stating to disclose them would involve "international relationships" and would not be in the public interest. Following that the Government, opposing a move that would restrain Secretary Wallace from enforcing the quotas, insisted economic conditions in the world sugar producing areas had led them to the figures mentioned in the allotments.

Taking of testimony was concluded and Justice Bailey said he would hear arguments in the case Friday.

Coroner Probes Woman's Death

J. F. Foley Held After Wife Is Killed by Pistol in Their Home.

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald will hold an inquest at 11:30 today in the fatal shooting of Mrs. Rose H. Foley, 34, of the 1300 block of T street southeast.

As Homicide Squad detectives investigated, police held the victim's husband, James F. Foley, civilian pay clerk at U. S. Marine Headquarters here and warrant officer of the Sixth Marine Reserves Brigade, for investigation pending the coroner's verdict.

Mrs. Foley was killed instantly Sunday night in her apartment when a .45-caliber pistol which her husband was cleaning was discharged. Foley told detectives the weapon became wet when he attended a Marine drill earlier in the day at Nokesville, Va.

He asserted Mrs. Foley was sitting on an inclosed porch while he was cleaning the automatic nearby. The gun went off accidentally, he said, sending a bullet into the base of his wife's skull.

Hearing the shot, Mrs. Catherine Blume, a neighbor, rushed into the apartment and found Mrs. Foley on the floor and Foley hysterical. She summoned a physician.

The couple had been married seven years. Friends described them as very affectionate.

Mrs. Foley was a native of Newark, N. J. She is survived by her sister, Mrs. Wilbur Lines, of the 3000 block of Alabama avenue southeast.

Trade Unit Hits Airport Project

Opposition to beginning either the Municipal Center or developing a municipal airport at this time was expressed to the District Commissioners yesterday by a committee representing the Board of Trade.

Because of economic and business conditions and the general feeling about increased taxes, the committee said, both projects should be postponed for at least a year.

The committee was composed of Edwin C. Graham, Robert Fleming and Robert Cottrell, executive secretary of the board.

They talked with Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and Commissioner George E. Allen. Broader aspects of the contemplated discussion about estimates and taxes were postponed at the suggestion of the Commissioners who said they did not yet have the estimates in shape to discuss them at length.

Campus Lynching Club Formed at Maryland U.

An anonymous Campus Lynching Society has appeared at College Park with the avowed purpose of enforcing freshman rules at the University of Maryland.

Irritated by freshmen who have already painted their class numerals on the campus water tower, the society of 12 upper classmen has announced that it will "put the snooty freshmen in their place."

The society plans to operate like a vigilance committee, and freshmen who are seen disobeying regulations will be placed on a blacklist making them eligible, according to the society's announcement in the undergraduate newspaper, "for persuasive measures calculated to teach them how to behave."

Ruling Settles 13-Year Fight

Old Lawsuits of Brothers Over Houses Ended by Court Action.

Law suits have buzzed for 13 years about two houses in the 1600 block of Eleventh street northwest, once the property of Silas Holmes, but now apparently are ended at last.

The United States Supreme Court yesterday refused to rule after lower courts had dismissed a suit by Lorenzo Allen, Holmes' great-grandson, to enforce a 1927 decision by the Court of Appeals, which had declared him entitled to the property. Allen's arguments had been challenged by Thomas Johnson and associated claimants, including Holmes' brother and several grandchildren.

The highest tribunal denied to George Hyman, of Washington, review of deficiency Federal income taxes of $17,357 assessed against him for 1928.

It refused to rule in the case of Campbell C. Cochran, jr., Washington attorney, who was suing Irving E. Burdick, New York lawyer, for fees as an associate in 47 cases under the war mineral relief act, a case which the Court of Appeals ruled should be tried on its merits.

For technical reasons, it denied the International Finance Corporation review of a lower court decision involving title to four automobiles claimed by the General Motors Acceptance Corporation.

Roosevelt's Signature Will Be Added to 30,000 in His Book.

President Roosevelt can expect a visit today from Milorad Raitchevitch, whose book of 30,000 signatures, including those of Queen Mary and Mahatma Gandhi, is evidence of his claim to being the world's champion autograph collector.

High spots in the book of Mr. Raitchevitch, a native of Yugoslavia, are the signatures of Europe's rulers. In fact, he has them all except that of Joseph Stalin.

One of the toughest jobs was getting Gandhi to put his John Hancock in the little red book. It took a month, Mr. Reitchevitch said, to locate the Indian leader, who then said: "No."

"I argued with him. I showed him my book. Finally I told him I might even kill myself if he refused to sign. See, there is his signature. It is in Hindustani."

Apparently, Mr. Raitchevitch is not interested in the American scene as it is reflected from a Detroit baseball diamond, because he secured Henry Ford's signature and not Schoolboy Rowe's while in the automobile city.

After getting President Roosevelt to sign, for which arrangements have been made through the Department of State, Mr. Raitchevitch said, he is bound for New York to get the signature of John D. Rockefeller.

Mr. Raitchevitch's 30,000 signatures have taken 25 years of wandering around the world.

"My first was King Peter I of Siberia," he said. "With that as a start it was not difficult to persuade others to sign beside him."

Funeral Rites For Gen. Mann Set Tomorrow

Retired Officer Will Be Buried With Military Honors in Arlington.

Funeral services for Maj. Gen. William A. Mann, U. S. A., retired, will be held at 2 p. m. tomorrow at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo will officiate. Burial with full military honors from the Fort Myer gate of Arlington National Cemetery will follow at 3 p. m.

Gen. Mann, the former chief of staff of the Army of Cuban Pacification, died yesterday at his residence at the Highlands. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Elsie M. Mann.

The veteran officer was born in Pennsylvania, July 31, 1854. He entered the United States Military Academy at West Point in 1871, graduated and was commissioned in 1875. He served through the grades of the Army being promoted colonel in March, 1911, and brigadier general in 1915. He was promoted to the rank of major general and was retired in June of 1930. A graduate of the Army War College in the class of 1905, he had served several tours of duty on the General Staff Corps.

Gen. Mann saw action in the Sioux Indian campaign in 1890 and 1891. He was with the Fifth Army Corps in Cuba, participating in the battle of El Caney and the siege of Santiago de Cuba. "For gallantry in action against Spanish forces at El Caney, Cuba," in 1898 he received the Silver Star decoration.

The officer served in the Philippine Islands in 1899, participating in numerous actions against insurgents. During 1903 he was a member of the board for revision of firing regulations of small arms.

Prisoner Shuns Food 14 Days

Slaying Suspect Removed to Gallinger for Mind Tests.

A 14-day hunger strike, during which the prisoner lost 20 pounds, yesterday led Assistant United States Attorney Julian Richards to order Harrison McK. Kaiser sent to Gallinger Hospital for mental observation. Kaiser has been in jail to await trial on a charge of murdering James P. Morgan, Navy Yard worker.

Starting his fast when other prisoners at the jail also objected to their food in a mass demonstration two weeks ago, Kaiser has steadfastly refused to partake of the meals since.

Lately, it was said, he has declined to talk to any one, and had never shown that he heard what was being told him. He gave no motive for refusing to eat.

Morgan, an official of the Navy Yard union, was shot and killed in front of his home in 1932 as he was preparing to visit the union's office and go over his books. Kaiser was suspected because it was known he was unfriendly to Morgan after the latter failed to have him reinstated in the Navy Yard after dismissal.

Exercise Produces Health, Says Official in "Y" Drive

Points Out Business Men Often Neglect Selves Until Too Late.

"The very foundation of happy living is the possession of good health."

Thus does R. B. Morgan, boys' physicial director of the Washington Y. M. C. A., value regular exercise.

Mr. Morgan, who, with other members of the Y's physical staff here, is cooperating with The Washington Post in making available to Capital men and boys all their recreational facilities without cost during "Keep Health Week," is a graduate of the Y. M. C. A. physical education college at Springfield, Mass.

"Physical activity produces positive health values," he said. "It is needed for beneficial physiological effects upon the body and to provide relaxation and diversion from the routine of daily work.

"The average business man today lacks a proper sense of direction with respect to his physical health and well-being and what the actual effects of his everyday living habits are on his physical constitution. They so often fail to appreciate good health until after it is too late—until they have lost it.

"The most tragic thing in life—to me, at least—is the successful business man who has spent many years and much money developing his mental abilities and has let his physical condition take care of itself, and as a result must give up his work in the early 40's or 50's to spend months, possibly years, and perhaps the rest of his life in a sanitarium trying to get well."

This week through Saturday The Post and the Y. M. C. A. are giving you a chance to see how this regular exercise business works out in practice. Clip the accompanying coupon, sign it and then go down to the Central Y. M. C. A. Building at 1736 G street northwest, and show it to any "Y" official in the lobby. He will see that you have the free access to any facility you may desire to use. He'll even see that you get soap and a towel without charge.

RAIN . . . rain . . . day after day. Drenching sheets of rain that wash away bridges . . . rain that overflows streams . . . rain that floods streets and sweeps down the sidewalks.

Already old Jupe Pluvius has wept over Washington . . . twelve of the last twenty-two days.

You shiver . . . you retreat to your warm living room . . . you dread to leave the protection of the porch. Father, who toils, practically sleeps with his umbrella and overshoes . . . even when one of you sprints to the street car or the family automobile . . . you get soaked!

But each morning . . . despite the heavy rains . . . slippery flooded streets . . . a Washington Post carrier salesman delivers your copy of The Post to your door promptly.

The Post carrier salesman who shrugs his shoulders and tramps through the rain looks for no praise. It's part of his job . . . he'll tell you. He's proud of the responsibility he bears with his employer.

And the next time it rains, he'll grin and wade through it.

He wouldn't think of calling your attention to his dark . . . dreary . . . 4-o'clock-in-the-morning sloshing about in a miniature cloudburst . . . so we take this means of paying a passing tribute to a good young soldier of the press who does a job faithfully day in and day out . . . regardless of the weather.

Stocks Decline Five-Tenths as Volume Lags

General Cigar Advances to New High; Sales Drop to 451,400 Shares.

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—Speculation went through another slow-motion performance today, leaving stocks and other markets virtually unchanged. The drift of share prices and commodities was downward, while bonds held their own and United States Government issues extended previous gains a little. Thus the recent anti-inflation pattern in financial markets was prolonged.

The stamina of the recovery in United States Government bonds cheered the financial community. However, in the absence of bullish inspiration from business and political sources, the stock market held little attraction for traders.

Activity Dies Away.

Early activity in radio and other individual issues died away as it became evident the market lacked the power to resume last Friday's rally.

Volume dwindled to 451,400 shares compared with 872,190 Friday, while the Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 selected stocks yielded five-tenths of a point, closing at 70.8.

General Cigar rose to a new 1934 peak at 56½, where it was up more than 3 points. It ended with a net gain of about 2 points following its week-end rise on favorable dividend news. Simms Petroleum shared the spotlight as it advanced 1⅝ to a new top.

Most of the important stocks held to a narrow groove. American Telephone, Santa Fe, Bethlehem Steel, J. I. Case, Loew's, Montgomery Ward, Chrysler, General Motors and U. S. Steel closed fractionally to a point lower.

Takes Old Place.

Radio, on a trading spurt in the forenoon, took its old place at the head of the list of most active shares. The A stock moved up 2¾ and the B more than a point. The relatively large turnover in the common resulted in a trifling gain. Brokers tagged the strength in Radio shares as "seasonal," based on expectations of better demand for its products.

Renewed weakness in sterling was a drag on the market for leading staples and helped to discourage bullish speculation in securities. Cotton finished 5 to 35 cents a bale lower after losing gains scored a brisk upturn on the Government's monthly crop estimate. Wheat sagged ¾ to 1⅛ cents a bushel.

Commodity traders noted silver and gold were quoted at new peaks in London, coincident with the fall in sterling to a new low in terms of the French franc. The pound touched $4.91 in New York, off 1⅝ cents.

The gold standard looked more secure in France and other European gold countries to some monetary students as result of the support shown the Doumergue government in the French cantonal elections over the week-end. The franc rallied early, but eased later.

Conclusions that business was showing a steady undertone were drawn from such business barometers as came to light over the week-end and during the day.

Best Progress in Four Years Recorded for Grocery Trade

Increase in Consumption of Foods, Started Last Year, Proceeds at More Rapid Rate in 1934; Orders Now Are for Larger Amounts.

New York, Oct. 8.—The increase in the consumption of foods, which started last year and carried the total for the country to around 90,000,000 tons, for which the public paid approximately $18,000,000,000, has proceeded at a more rapid rate thus far in 1934. With the exception of May to July, monthly distributive totals have been successively higher, with abrupt gains reported for both August and September. The curtailment of sales in some of the industrial centers, and the unemployment increases in districts where there has been a lack of FERA activities have been more than overbalanced by the increased expenditures of farmers.

Buying from wholesalers and manufacturers is being done with more confidence than last year, orders are for larger amounts, and a growing percentage of the better grades of goods and fancies are being included. Manufacturers of breakfast cereals are having one of the best seasons in years, and good headway is being reported by flour mills, coffee roasters and sugar refiners. The unit output of nearly all manufacturers and packers of foodstuffs is well in advance of last year's.

In contrast to the situation prevailing in the majority of industries, the leading units in the grocery trade had larger earnings in the third quarter than in the second one. In a number of instances totals were above those for any quarter back through 1931, and the cash position of some of the large distributors is the best that has been achieved since 1930, according to a survey of the grocery trade which has just been completed by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc.

Consumer Demand Widening.

Sales of both wholesale and retail grocery concerns have advanced from 10 to 20 per cent, as compared with the dollar volume for the corresponding nine months of 1933. Retailers generally are increasing their stocks of canned goods, staples, and fancy items, chiefly because of the strength of the consumer demand, but the apprehension caused by the imminence of higher prices is prompting many retailers to cover distant requirements rather generously. The independent stores are more than holding their own with chain competitors, aided by the package sales of light wines and beer. Nationally-advertised brands of canned goods, packaged cereals, and staples, such as sugar, flour, rice, coffee, tea, macaroni, soap, and condiments form the bulk of the current distribution. Many retailers already are complaining of the paucity of stocks of canned fruits and vegetables, and cereals.

As consumers are laying in the largest quantities of preserved and canned goods in several years, retailers are increasing, from week to week, their orders on wholesalers, in anticipation of price increases, which already are emphatically in evidence in the majority of lines. Retailers' inventories have been built up to rather good proportions, but merchandise is moving out almost as quickly as received. Prodded to action by the constant publicity regarding higher prices and the shortage of crop yields, consumers are endeavoring to be safeguarded against future developments. With pantries filled to overflowing, consumption naturally is more liberal, resulting in fresh demands being placed on the wholesaler.

Prices Strongly Upward.

With the exception of the slight recession which appeared in April and May, prices have been rising steadily since the first of the year. The index number of wholesale grocery prices, compiled by the National-American Wholesale Grocers Association, rose to 87.7 for September, which is the highest level reached in nearly four years, or since November, 1930, when it stood at 88.0. The current index compared with 80.2 at the beginning of the year, which is a gain of 7.5 points, or 9.4 per cent, while the increase over the September, 1933, figure of 79.4 amounts to 8.3 points, or 10.5 per cent. The lowest point touched by this index since it was started in 1921 was in February, 1933, when it registered 63.0. The distance covered from that position amounts to 24.7 points, or 39.2 per cent.

Selling prices are averaging 8 to 15 per cent higher than at this time a year ago, with advances in some items as much as 50 per cent, and the increases have extended to nearly all commodities. The most pronounced advances have been in staples, especially flour, sugar and packing-house and dairy products. The scarcity of canned goods is reflected in the increase in prices of tomatoes, peas, beans, corn and fruits. The increases, however, are not comparable with the rise in meat, lard, flour and other heavy commodities, in which the processing tax is being absorbed. Dried fruits have been showing unusual strength, with prices tending upward.

Collections have improved constantly this year over the 1933 status, with whosesalers indicating a steady decrease in losses from failures and delinquent accounts. Remittances from cotton and tobacco-growing districts have been exceptionally good. Retailers report some spottiness in payments, especially in industrial centers, where labor difficulties have interfered with employment, but the average is up sharply from the showing at this time last fall. Some of the small retailers have been handicapped by the delay in receiving funds for merchandise sold to customers on relief rolls. With the restrictions placed on doubtful accounts, cash sales have increased, helping the general collection situation.

Bond Market Is Unchanged; At 83.7 Level

Firmness of Federals Feature Trading; Sales Decline to 8 Millions.

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—Continued firmness in United States Government issues featured today's bond market. Corporate loans moved within a range with prices mixed.

Transfers aggregated $8,514,000, compared with $13,458,000 last Friday.

Federals Close Higher.

With but three exceptions all classes of U. S. Government bonds finished three-thirty-seconds to nearly ¾ of a point higher. The called fourth 4¼ Liberties advanced ¼ to 101.15, following the Treasury's announcement that the privilege of conversion would remain open for only four more days.

Home owners loan and Federal farm mortgage issues gained one-sixteenth to ¼ of a point.

Corporate bonds were hesitant. Prime investments, such as American Telephone debenture 5½'s, Goodrich 6½'s, and National Steel 5's remained unchanged, and fractional advances were shown by some obligations of New York Telephone, Rochester Gas & Electric Tobacco products, and Union Pacific. Santa Fe 4's gained ¼ at 94, while the 4½'s declined ⅛ to 102⅛. Ohio Public Service 7's improved 1½ to close at 103½.

The position of the Treasury October 5 was: Receipts, $41,760,008.45; expenditures, $60,806,454.84; balance, $2,165,758,691.73; customs receipts for the month, $6,669,064.13.

Receipts for the fiscal year (since July 1), $1,048,600,394.26; expenditures, $1,641,027,372.26 (including $918,237,631.12 of emergency expenditures); excess of expenditures, $592,426,978; gold assets, $7,982,675,272.46.

Curb's Prices Turn Mixed In Dull Sales

Specialties Are Firm as Trading Dwindles to 84,000 Shares.

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—Specialties were firm on the curb exchange today, but a number of fractional recessions appeared in the industrial list at the close. Trading was dull.

Metal shares held up despite the active selling in that group on the big board. Lake Shore, Pioneer Gold and Wright Hargreaves were steady, while Hollinger Gold added a fraction.

Singer Manufacturing touched a new 1934 high at 216, up 1. Similar advances were recorded by Ford Motor of Canada, Dow Chemical, and Insurance Co. of North America. Pan-American Airways and Pittsburgh Glass were up around 2 each.

Shares finishing fractionally lower included Aluminum Co. of America, Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Swift Internacional and Electric Bond & Share. Swift & Co., American Cyanamid B and American Gas & Electric ruled steady.

Transfers dwindled to 84,000 shares, compared with 99,000 last Friday.

The ratio of these member total borrowings to the market value of all listed stocks on this date was therefore 2.57 per cent. Member borrowings have not broken down to separate those only on listed share collateral from those on other collateral; thus these ratios usually will exceed the true relationship between borrowings on all listed shares and their market value.

Steel Operation Rate Sustained At 25 Per Cent

Large-Scale Buying Lags; Orders Now Gain in Size and Numbers

Cleveland, Oct. 8.—Improved sentiment in iron and steel markets, based on expectation of long-deferred requirements, has not yet been translated into any large-scale buying, though the slight gain in the number and size of orders last week was sufficient to sustain steelworks operations at 25 per cent, states the magazine Steel.

Fundamentally, delay in general manufacturing specifications has been due to slowness in most markets for consumer goods, but it is becoming more apparent that large users are making every effort to forestall purchasing, apparently in anitcipation of lower prices.

Some of the railroads have postponed car repair programs, avowedly for this purpose. Instead of buying new material, a large oil company is dismantling tanks in one district and moving them to another where more urgently needed.

Scrap Prices Waver.

Scrap prices are again wavering, strength at Chicago being more than offset by reductions at Detroit and Pittsburgh. Pig iron producers are finding it more difficult to compete against scrap, though pig iron is only twice the price householders are paying for good grade of soft coal.

Because some consumers installed equipment to slit wide sheets to make narrow strips, cold-rolled strip manufacturers have revised their extras, resulting in a reduction of as much as $25 a ton.

Adding to the uncertainty regarding prices last week was the outspoken attitude of Donald R. Richberg, indicating that as the Administration's chief policy-making official he will put into practice his idea that NRA codes should be purged of all price and production control features. Carried out, for steel this could only mean a general revision of the present Government-sponsored set-up of code prices.

New Government Project.

As an encouragement, however, the Government is bringing out a new $2,000,000,000 public works program, supplementing that now being concluded, and expected to develop large steel tonnages.

Structural awards last week, 20,000 tons, were nearly double those of the week preceding, and included several fair-sized industrial structures. The Du Ponts are taking bids on 2,800 tons for an Edgemoor, Del., plant; Republic Steel Corporation is making tentative inquiries for a strip-mill building, which may require 2,000 tons.

In addition to 50,000 tons of structural steel for the Los Angeles water district, on which bids were opened last week, tenders will be taken October 31 on 11,000 tons for the same project. Standard Oil of California awarded 4,400 tons of plates for 12 tanks. Contrary to seasonal trend, tin plate mill operations moved up 5 points, to 50 per cent.

Automobile output last week dropped sharply to 19,000, when Buick, Cadillac, Pontiac and all Chrysler units except Dodge shut down. Some automobile manufacturers promise steelm

Wheat Value Pushed Down Under Selling

Early Advances Are Offset in Corn Prices Also; Oats Hold Steady.

Chicago, Oct. 8 (AP).—Eastern selling, together with lack of sustained support from speculative buyers, turned wheat and corn prices decidedly downward late today, more than offsetting early gains.

An outstanding feature was that domestic flour trade, which last week took on big proportions, failed to continue in volume today.

In addition, friends of higher prices were disconcerted by the fact that a sharp advance of wheat quotations in Liverpool dwindled out almost altogether before the day was at and end.

Wheat Closes Down.

Wheat in Chicago closed near the day's bottom level, ¾-1⅛ under Saturday's finish; December, new, 96⅜-½; corn, ⅜-⅞ down; December, new, 73-73¼; oats, unchanged to ½ higher, and provisions unchanged to a decline of 2 cents.

Late weakness of wheat developed notwithstanding 1,705,000 bushels decrease of the United States wheat visible supply, bringing the total down to 110,339,000 bushels, against 146,269,000 a year ago.

Contributing momentum to reactions from wheat price upturns was the fact that the Winnipeg exchange was not in session today, and there was talk of likelihood that an accumulation of hedging orders would have to be handled in Winnipeg early tomorrow.

Another bearish influence was an 1,232,000-bushel increase in the amount of wheat on ocean passage, making the aggregate 33,720,000 bushels, compared with 31,080,000 at this time last year.

Frost reports from Argentina were more or less responsible for a transient early upward trend of wheat prices both here and at Liverpool.

Frosts Are Widespread.

Buenos Aires cables to a Chicago house said Argentine frosts over the week-end were widespread, but as a rule were light. Inasmuch as the new Argentina wheat crop in the north is just flowering, possibility of some harm, especially in Cordoba Province, was admitted.

Notice, too, was taken of reports of high winds and dust storms over domestic winter wheat territory Southwest.

Corn fluctuated mainly in line with wheat, and reflected knowledge that shipping demand was laggard. The cash corn basis, however, was ¾-1½ higher, white corn selling at the highest premium of the season. Oats were responsive to meagerness of receipts.

Provisions sagged a little at the last with grain.

Metals Trade Turns Quiet; Copper Is Dull

Demand for Zinc Is Poor; Lead Inquiries Fair; Tin Fluctuates.

New York, Oct. 8 (AP).—Metal markets were generally quiet during the week.

Continued poor demand for zinc accounted for a further decline of 50 cents per ton to the lowest prices since spring.

While moderate buying orders were uncovered at that level, the trade apparently felt that downward readjustment of ore output would be necessary to balance consumer offtake, and plans were under discussion in the tri-State district for another period of mine curtailment.

Lead Quotations Steady.

Lead, on the other hand, experienced a fair day-to-day inquiry from various consuming branches and quotations were steady at last week's decline.

The demand was said to have equalled daily smelter ore intake, but buyers showed little or no disposition to purchase beyond their October requirements.

Copper was dull and consumers failed to respond to efforts of producers to maintain a stable market through control of output. A further decline in the European price and plans being developed for reorganization of the NRA, which it was felt might have an influence on the code governing the marketing of copper, caused consumers to withhold purchases.

Tin Exchanges Explained.

Fluctuations in tin quotations were due almost entirely to variations in sterling exchange prices early in the week. Declines had no apparent influence on the attitude of buyers and business was limited chiefly to the filling of prompt needs. Tin-plate operations remained at the recent rate of about 45 per cent of capacity.

Antimony displayed a steadier undertone in sympathy with the Chinese market, but local transactions were confined to small prompt lots.

Steel production schedules were responsive to small fluctuations in the volume of orders received in the various districts, and little or no market change in the rate of ingot output for the industry as a whole was noted.

Cavaliers Lauded By Coach Tebell

Is Pleased With Showing Against Navy Here.

University, Va., Oct. 8 (Spl.). As Virginia this afternoon began preparations for playing St. John's College here next Saturday Head Coach Gus Tebell had much praise for the way his charges played against the Navy in Washington Saturday. Today's drill was only a light one for those who faced the Midshipmen.

What pleased Coach Tebell most was the way the Cavaliers came back in the second half after being outscored in the first. During the last two periods, with the exception of one spectacular run by Navy's Buzz Borries, the Virginians had a decided edge over the Sailors in offensive play.

Capt. Johnson, Berger, and some of the others were somewhat incapacitated today, but Trainer Archie Hahn hopes to have them in shape to face St. John's at Scott Stadium at 3 p. m. Saturday.

Snyder went from the Goodrich Tires, Akron, Ohio, semipro team, to the majors, later playing with Toronto, Columbus, Shreveport, Texarkana, Kalamazoo and Grand Rapids. He was with the local semi-pro team during the last two years.

the Congressional pro, scored 47—42—89, while Miss Susan Hacker, long-driving Chevy Chase entry, matched her score with a 44—45—89.

Virginia's titleholder and favorite in the championship, 110-pound Lily Harper, of Portsmouth, did an even 90, after going out in 44. The host club star, Mrs. Hugh T. Nicolson, twice former District champion, shot a 90 also, while Mrs. Jack Scott, of Congressional, erstwhile Colorado State champion, encountered trouble with her approaches and wound up with 94. Mrs. Bishop Hill, of Chevy Chase, qualified safely, with 97, as did Mrs. J. F. Dowday, of Congressional, who had 98, and Mrs. George Parker, of Kenwood, with 99.

The other qualifiers, none of whom broke 100, were Mrs. Hume Wrong and Miss Louise Claytor, of Chevy Chase; Mrs. J. T. Powell, of Manor; Mrs. Hume Peabody, of Army and Navy; Mrs. R. C. Welton, of Richmond, Va., and Mrs. J. R. DeFarges, of Columbia.

Scores Seven Pars.

Mrs. Clark's card showed but one 6, that being made on the fifth. She had 7 pars, 4 on the back nine.

The keenest disappointment of the day was Helen Dettweiler, 19-year-old Congressional ace. The Maryland champion withdrew after scoring a ragged 51 on the first nine.

Match play starting this morning finds Mrs. Clark, the medalist, engaging Richmond's lone entry, Mrs. Welton.

Walt Mason, Himself

In Politics.

The wheels of politics now throb along the rusty rails; the would-be statesman wants a job, excitement now prevails. The would-be statesman wants to hold some public office down; and so, with pledges fine and bold, he interviews the town. It is a sad and weary task, this skirmishing for votes, to seek the voters' home and ask if they won't ride his goats; to ask them if they'll play his game until the race is through, and have their neighbors do the same thing, their aunts and nieces, too. Before the primary arrives he's busy night and day beseeching voters and their wives to work and vote his way. He knows he's making people sore, his argument's a flop; he knows he has become a bore, and yet he can not stop. For other would-be statesmen chase along the public pike, and throw into the voter's face the bunk he doesn't like. If at the primary he wins, his work's not done at all; the stiff campaigning just begins, election's in the fall. And so he goes his weary round, on dusty roads he skims, pursued by farmers' hungry hounds, which wish to bite his limbs. Men grow so tired of candidates before the compaign's done, that when they see such tiresome skates they reach for ax or gun. The would-be statesman gains, perhaps the place for which he strove, is sworn in while admiring chaps are clustered round the stove. But hardly is he settled down, worn out by stress and strain, before he has to scour the town, and start a new campaign.
